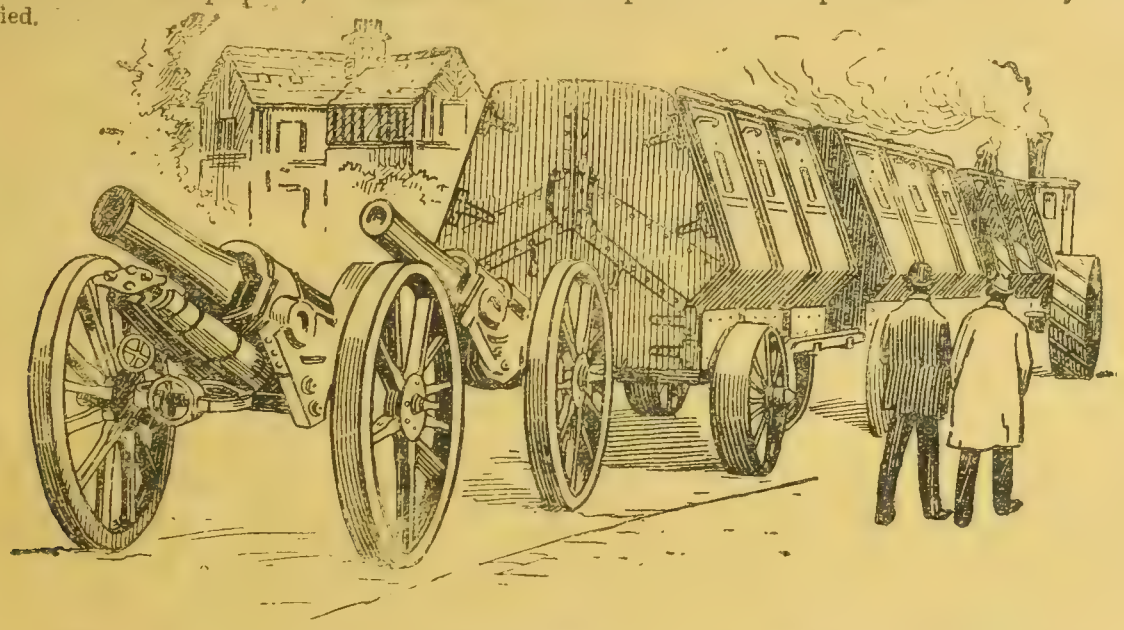
MECHANICAL TRACTION IN WAR

FOR ROAD TRANSPORT

With Notes on Automobiles generally, by Lieut.-Col. OTFRIED LAYRIZ, of the German Army.

Translated by R. B. MARSTON

PREFACE.—The transport of food and war material from the terminus of the railway to the camp is of the utmost importance to the army, and calls for the employment of all available means. Road transport by means of mechanical traction is now so developed as to be worthy of serious consideration in conjunction with horse traction for war purposes, and for this reason an attempt to set out the possibilities offered by various methods of mechanical traction may be justified.



ARMOURED ROAD TRAIN, AS ORDERED BY LORD ROBERTS FOR THE SOUTH AFRICAN CAMPAIGN

'The value of steam traction as an efficient supplement to animal transport, especially in carrying supplies in rear of an army, was clearly proved.'—Report on the Salisbury Manœuvres, 1898 from FIELD-MARSHAL RIGHT HON. LORD WOLSELEY, K.P., ETC., Commander-in-Chief, to the Secretary of State for War.

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.,

July 6, 1900.

On Saturday last was published the final volume of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' as originally planned. Two supplementary volumes are still to come, but the Dictionary so far as alphabetical arrangement goes is now complete, and the completion was appropriately celebrated by the déjeuner given at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor to those connected with the great enterprise. On the occasion Mr. George M. Smith, to whose liberality the nation owes by far its best cyclopædia of biography, gave in his too brief speech a hint of the cost. 'If,' he said, 'anyone desires to produce a work of the same character as the Dictionary he must be prepared for an expenditure which could not be stated under six figures, and the second figure must be a four or a five. And if he depended for the return of part of the expenditure from the sales, he must consider himself fairly fortunate if that return equalled half the expenditure.' That is to say, the publisher is out of pocket some £70,000 for the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' In any other country the undertaking would be carried out with the aid of the State. In England 'official persons,' which being translated means the persons entrusted with the national purse, give no encouragement to literature. Consequently the greatest publishing enterprise ever undertaken and carried to a successful issue in this country is due to the munificence and energy of one man.

Mr. Smith had first thought of a universal biography somewhat on the lines of the 'Biographie Universelle;' but when Mr. Leslie Stephen, the first editor, came to deal with the matter practically it was found that the scheme was too vast to be managed with any degree of success. It was therefore decided to limit the scope of the work to Great Britain and Ireland. Even with such limitation the work, in Mr. Morley's phrase, is truly Titanic. It extends to 29,108 closely printed pages, comprising as many articles; in other words, the Dictionary contains some 30,000 biographies of English men and women who have done, said, or sung anything worth remembering. Most people, we dare say, will be surprised to learn that British worthies are so large a host. Mr. Stephen and Mr. Lee have generously included many whose names and deeds are absolutely unknown to the man in the street, and precisely in that fact lies one of the chief merits of the work. Biographies of immortals abound. The careers and achievements of Shakespeares, Newtons, Cromwells, Miltons have been described again and again in greater detail than was possible in a biographical dictionary; but the smaller men have hitherto been neglected. Now, however, the reader desiring information respecting any Briton of obscure renown who existed before the close of the nineteenth century has only to turn to the pages of the 'Dictionary of National Biography.' There he will get all ascertainable facts, minus fiction and speculation.

It was fortunate for the enterprise that Mr. Smith entrusted the editorship to Mr. Leslie Stephen. In all these islands there was probably no man better fitted for the task. A scholar and a man of letters, he had also the practical sagacity necessary to its happy accomplishment. The skill of a great editor is shown by the contributors and assistants he gathers about him—in other words, by his knowledge of men and affairs, as well as of literature—and in this respect Mr. Stephen was especially successful. The contributors to the 'Dictionary of National Biography' include nearly all the noted men of letters, as distinct from poets and novelists, of the last twenty years. The same happy instinct which guided the editor in choosing contributors also guided him in the choice of editorial assistants. Mr. Sidney Lee came to Waterloo Place seventeen years ago with an introduction from the late Master of Balliol. He was engaged as contributor, then he became assistant-editor, and finally, when Mr. Stephen's health broke down, sole editor. How he has carried on the editorship our readers know, and it was at once a natural and a graceful conclusion that the contributors should present him with a mark of their appreciation in the form of valuable silver plate. All concerned are indeed to be congratulated on the completion of a work which is not only a glory to the publishing trade of London, but in the best sense a credit to the nation. With that work, the greatest enterprise of its kind ever undertaken in this country, the names of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., through Mr. George M. Smith, of Mr. Leslie Stephen, and Mr. Sidney Lee will for ever be associated. Whatever in the literature of the time may or may not last, the 'Dictionary of National Biography' will remain a monument of publishing enterprise and editorial skill.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The outbreak in China will of course lead publishers to pay increased attention to that country. 'China, the Long-Lived Empire,' by Miss E. R. Scidmore, which Messrs. Macmillan had originally intended for the autumn, will now be issued at an earlier date. Frequent visits of the author to the Celestial Empire have rendered her very familiar with the country and its people.

A new volume in the shape of a work on Sir Stamford Raffles will shortly be added by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin to his 'Builders of the Empire' series. The volume was originally taken in hand by Mr. H. F. Wilson (for sometime Mr. Chamberlain's private secretary) and Mr. Hugh E. Egerton, but on the departure of Mr. Wilson to South Africa, as legal assistant to Sir Alfred Milner, the entire work was placed in charge of Mr. Egerton.

In connection with the completion of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' it is interesting to recall that Mr. George M. Smith, to whose munificence the nation owes that splendid work, was among the early and staunchest friends of Thackeray. As a very young man Mr. Smith read 'The Kickleburys on the Rhine,' discerned that the author was a man of genius, and opened negotiations for a new work. The result was Thackeray's long association with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co. Under his editorship the Cornhill was started, but, as Trollope remarked, he was not a good editor. He was, however, something far better, a novelist of the first rank, and one of the glories of English literature. With his fame and the great work now brought to a triumphant conclusion will always be associated the celebrated firm in Waterloo Place.

Mr. Heinemann announces a sixpenny edition of the late Mr. Stephen Crane's best known book, 'The Red Badge of Courage.'

On the occasion of his jubilee the inhabitants of Warsaw have decided to present

Henry Sienkiewicz with a gift of landed property, and already a large sum has been raised. The jubilee celebrations and presentation will take place in November next. Famous English novelists would doubtless be glad to see the example followed in this country.

Mr. Angus Hamilton, who is a stepson of Mr. Pinero and comes of a family of soldiers, was the correspondent of the Times with General Baden-Powell at Mafeking. He is an amateur soldier himself, and experienced remarkable adventures during the siege, being taken prisoner by the Boers and afterwards wounded in a fight. Messrs. Methuen will shortly publish his book, 'The Siege of Mafeking,' which will be illustrated by photographs taken by Mr. Hamilton.

Mr. Heinemann will issue very shortly a volume which deals with the action of the Afrikander Bond, and with the question of their direct responsibility for the war. The author, Mr. F. W. Bell, has lived in South Africa for many years, and has had exceptional opportunities of observation and exact information. The title of the book is 'The South African Conspiracy; or, the Aims of Afrikanderdom.'

In reference to the Indian famine of the present year, Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co. are about to issue a volume on 'Indian Famines and their Causes,' compiled by Mr. Romesh Dutt, C.I.E. Mr. Dutt is already known by his translations of Indian epics and his works on Indian history; he has been in the Indian Civil Service for more than twenty-five years and been a famine relief officer himself in past years. His book will have a chapter on famines in India during the last 130 years, a series of open letters to Lord Curzon on the land question in India, and chapters on railways, irrigation, &c.

Messrs. Methuen publish this week Part VIII. of their 'History of the Boer War,' by Mr. F. H. E. Cunliffe, Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford. This part commences the narrative of the Battle of Colenso, which will be concluded in Part IX. The firm has been fortunate enough to secure the co-operation of many of the generals and officers commanding in the various engagements. They have revised or will revise the various chapters, and in some cases they have supplied the plans of the fights.

Dr. A. H. Japp, who was the fortunate possessor of a fine copy of the first edition of 'Lorna Doone,' has just sold it through Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge for £37. The figure curiously illustrates the fortunes of famous books. When 'Lorna Doone' appeared, the critics, as Mr. Blackmore frequently stated, were mostly contemptuous and the public indifferent. Then something drew attention to the story, and it leaped into a popularity which it has maintained ever since. Collectors are now eagerly on the look out for copies of the first edition, which may be expected to go still higher in price. At the same sale a copy of the first edition of Stevenson's 'New Arabian Nights' was sold for £14. 10*s*., while a first edition of 'A Century of Roundels,' with an autograph letter from the author, brought £6. 10*s*.

Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. are publishing a new novel by Mr. M. P. Shiel, entitled 'The Man-Stealers.' It is a story of adventure, and deals with an incident in the life of the Iron Duke.

After many reports and contradictions it is announced, with a show of authority, that Mr. Hall Caine's new novel will appear serially in a new paper for ladies which Messrs. C. A. Pearson, Ltd., intend to start next year. The story, it is stated, is to be called 'The Eternal City,' not 'The Roman,' as was first announced. Mr. Caine cannot be congratulated on the title, which suggests a guide-book to Rome.

Mr. John Macqueen will issue on the 10th inst. a book entitled 'The Autobiography of a Charwoman.' Its author, Annie Wakeman (in private life, Mrs. Lathrop), for many years the correspondent of important American journals, devoted much time to the nether side of London life.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are publishing a sixpenny edition of 'When a Man 's Single,' by Mr. J. M. Barrie.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish Mr. George Yeld's 'Scrambles in the Eastern Graians.' Mr. Yeld, who is the editor of the Alpine Journal, has been one of the chief authorities for some years on the group of which he here treats, and was one of the joint authors of the volume on 'The Mountains of Cogne' in Mr. Unwin's 'Climbers' Guides.'

To some readers the most interesting thing in this month's Nineteenth Century is the editorial proposal to found an association 'having for its object to fix public attention steadily upon some of the most important lessons taught by the South African war.' Already many influential men have agreed to join the association, which will be in effect a Committee of Vigilance, and others willing to join should send their names to the office of the Nineteenth Century. The articles include an important paper on China, by Mr. Henry Norman, whose writings on the East are well known, and papers on 'Soldier Settlers in South Africa' and 'The Home Generals and their Work in the Coming Autumn,' by Colonel Stopford and Colonel Lonsdale Hale respectively. Mr. J. Henniker-Heaton, M.P., explains 'Why Sixpenny Telegrams do not Pay,' and his explanation is summed up in the assertion: 'The plea that sixpenny telegrams do not pay is a false and unworthy quibble, and official lips already stammer in pronouncing it.' Mr. Heaton suggests a committee to deal with the bunglings of Government officials. Mrs. S. A. Barnett gives an account of the ways of 'Town Children in the Country,' and Dr. Guinness Rogers calls aloud for a leader. As usual, the number is almost as much up-to-date as the daily newspaper.

The editor of the Magazine of Art has had the good luck to secure some hitherto unpublished letters by J. M. W. Turner, which appear in the July number with editorial comments by Mr. Cosmo Monkhouse. The letters were written to James Holworthy, a painter in water colours 'of some reputation in his day,' and are published by permission of Mr. William Bemrose, of Derby, their present owner. They are familiar and characteristic. Thus, referring to the weather, Turner wrote in September 1816: 'Rain, rain, rain, day after day. Italy deluged; Switzerland a "wash pot." Neufchatel, Bienne, and Morat Lakes all in one.' There is little in them of artistic or literary value (Turner never learned to write), but they are interesting on the personal side. The number includes articles on the Royal Academy, the New Gallery, and our National Museums. The illustrations are throughout of exceptional merit.

Mr. David Nutt writes to warn the trade against an individual who recently called upon him, and by purchasing books to a considerable amount (which were to be delivered at a bookseller's in the Row) obtained change out of a worthless cheque for a yet larger amount. Needless to say, the bookseller in the Row refused to take delivery of the books, having no knowledge of the customer.

The Free Age Press, Maldon, Essex, has nearly ready for publication a series of six booklets by Tolstoy on important questions, selected from recent articles, letters, and unpublished material in the care of Mr. V. Tchertkoff. Tolstoy's last piece of work, an article of some 10,000 words on 'Patriotism and Government,' will form one of these early booklets, and at a later date the examination of the position of the workers, 'The New Slavery,' to which the great Russian novelist is giving the last touches, will be published first in book form by the Free Age Press.

Mr. D. Stewart, of Messrs. Mr. T. Fisher Unwin writes: 'We regret that, owing to the printers having gone to press with the last signature of this book ("Robert Orange," by John Oliver Hobbes) without receiving the press proof, a sentence has been missed out on page 408. It is in Disraeli's last letter, and should go in between the words "cause of the quarrel" and "Orange applied." It runs as follows: "The passion of love invariably drives men and women to an extreme step in one direction or another. It will send some to the Cloister, some to the Tribune, some to the stage, some to heroism, some to crime, and all to their natural calling." Perhaps you could kindly give publicity to this.'

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

An entirely unknown correspondence of Alexander von Humboldt, says the National Zeitung, is now offered to Berlin collectors. It consists of two hundred letters, including all those addressed by the great scientist and courtier to Dr. Samuel Spiker, of the Berlin Royal Library and editor of the Spener'sche Zeitung, and contains an abundance of most varied confidential communications relating to the court and prominent political and military personages, together with satirical remarks on well-known learned men such as might be expected from Alexander von Humboldt's known inclination to backbiting. The letters were written in the thirties, are partly dated from Berlin and partly from Potsdam, according as the court stayed at one or the other residence, and many are in the French language, of which Humboldt had a complete mastery. This correspondence offers an authentic source of information for the private history of Berlin such as is afforded by Varnhagen's diaries. The whole is contained in a strongly bound leather volume, and its genuineness guaranteed by Humboldt himself in a legally attested document addressed to Spiker's daughter, prefixed to the collection.

'Die Lieder und Melodien der Geissler des Jahres 1349, nach der Aufzeichnung Hugo's von Reutlingen, von Paul Runge,' is announced by Breitkopf & Härtel, Leipzig. In this volume are printed for the first time the long and vainly sought melodies of the hymns sung by the Flagellants during the terrible visitation of plague called the Black Death in 1349 and 1350. Herr Runge's historical treatise on the music of the hymns is accompanied by two special studies of literary and ecclesiastical interest: a treatise by Prof. Dr. Schneegan on the Flagellist brotherhoods of Italy in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, with a comprehensive bibliography of their confessional hymns or lauds; and a second study by Dr. H. Pfannenschmid on the Flagellists of the year 1349 in Germany and the Netherlands, with special reference to their hymns.

'What is the rule for writing in Roman characters the date 1900?' This question has been put to M. Georges Chamerot, President of the Chambre des Imprimeurs Typographes, by M. Albert Gauthier-Villars, of the well-known publishing firm Gauthier-Villars & fils. The President, having consulted M. Polguerre, corrector of Hachette & Co., who is an authority in typographical matters, he at once replied that 1900 ought to be written MDCCCC. It was impossible not to put this question to M. Paul Delalain, of the firm Delalain frères, printers to the University of Paris, formerly Secretary to the Chamber of Printers and whilom President of the Cercle de la Librairie, who is so widely and favourably known as the author of works on typography and bookselling in France. M. Paul Delalain answers the question by a letter full of interest published in the Bibliographie de la France, March 31, of which we can only quote the purport. He unhesitatingly confirms the opinion of M. Polguerre, considering that MDCCCC is the simplest form, far simpler than the other three which have been suggested. These are: MDCD, that is, one thousand plus five hundred plus five hundred minus one hundred; MCM, that is, one thousand plus one thousand minus one hundred; and CMM, that is, two thousand less one hundred—all which are less easily read and require more time for consideration than MDCCCC.

With reference to the long projected adoption of a new calendar in Russia, the Mémorial de la Librairie Française says: The Imperial Commission, having found many inaccuracies in the Gregorian calendar, has elaborated a new one, which is said to have the twofold merit of being scientific and orthodox. Ordinary years are considered to have 365 days, but bissextile or leap-years 366. Leap years are those whose date is divisible by four with the exception of those divisible by 128. This system most resembles the solar calendar, an error of one day occurring only once in one thousand years. It has one advantage in fixing the spring equinox at the date on which it fell in the year of our Lord's nativity—that is, March 23. But in Russia it falls on March 9, so that it will be necessary to add fourteen and not thirteen days to the present calendar to obtain a perfect accord. Thus the Russians will be one day in advance instead of thirteen days behind us. This is an improvement. 'But,' adds the Memorial, 'would it not be more simple and practical to adopt our calendar, which is used by most of the nations with which Russia has intercourse? There are Commissions, however, in Russia as in France!' The new calendar comes into use on January 1, 1901.

W.H., the St. Petersburg correspondent of the Leipzig Börsenblatt, says, in that journal's issue for June 1, that the Knishnyi Wjestnik contains an article on a projected law dealing with the rights of Russian authors. It combats the proposal to restrict the duration of such rights to a shorter period than fifty years. 'But,' says W.H., 'for us in Western Europe the important question is whether, as hitherto, it will be permitted to translate Russian works without the consent of their authors, and also if Russians will in future be allowed to translate foreign works without the author's leave. But, as fully ten times more works are translated into Russian than are translated from Russian into foreign languages, it is scarcely to be expected that the Russians will hasten to give up such a profitable right.'

Of liberty of the press as understood in Russia we cite the following examples: By order of the Governor-General of Finland, the newspaper Wiipuri Sanomat has been inhibited for four months on account of a letter from Wiborg contained in it, and the newspaper Rauman lehti has been inhibited for two months because of an article on Russian pedlars. A circular of the Head Press Administration in Helsingfors says, inter alia: 'The press of Finland has thought fit to misjudge the political state of the country, and to interpret erroneously the real significance of the self-government and laws granted by his Majesty to the country; all such improper discussions will in future be severely punished.' The sale of separate numbers of the journal Rusky Listok has been prohibited by the Minister of the Interior; the Ssewerny Kurier has received a second warning; and so on.

CANADIAN COPYRIGHT.

THE NEW BILL BECOMES LAW.

The Times correspondent in Ottawa sends a despatch, dated the 4th inst., stating it is expected that the Copyright Bill now before the Dominion Parliament will become law this Session. The Special Committee of the House, he adds, find that the legislation covered by the Bill has been asked for by the Canadian Authors' Society and Canadian publishers, and on their representation and for the interest of Canadians concerned in copyright and publication in Canada the Bill is proposed. The Committee also find that the protection to Canadian publishers to be obtained by the Bill has the approval of the Society of Authors in Great Britain and of the British public. The Committee state that heretofore there has been constant friction and clashing of interests between those interested in copyright in Great Britain and those interested in copyright in Canada. At the present time we have the very satisfactory spectacle of these formerly clashing interests expressing themselves in harmony. It therefore appears likely that the passage of this measure will remove causes of difference, will confirm the harmony now existing, and will tend to do away with that conflict which has been a constant source of trouble in copyright legislation for many years past.

A fear has been expressed by some critics of the Bill that the passage of such legislation by the Parliament of Canada would show that Parliament is receding from the position taken up by Sir John Thompson, and would be an acknowledgment at the present juncture that Canada could only legislate upon copyright by virtue of Imperial legislation, Lord Monkswell's Bill now before the Imperial Parliament being the occasion for this legislation. The committee are, however, of opinion that this fear is groundless. It is quite true that Lord Monkswell's Bill contains a clause authorising a Colonial Legislature to pass just such legislation as is provided for by this Bill, but Lord Monkswell's Bill is not yet and may never become law, and it cannot be contended that this Bill, which will precede any British legislation upon the subject, depends upon the latter for its validity. The Committee are of opinion that the passage of the Bill will not in any way compromise the Government of Canada in protesting in the future, as in the past, against the claim of the Parliament of Great Britain to legislate for the Colonies in matters of copyright. The Committee, therefore, report the Bill without any amendment.

As we are going to press Mr. G. N. Morang called on us and we are glad to hear that the New Bill has passed the Canadian House of Commons. The important feature of the Bill is that it is in harmony with Section 34 of Lord Monkswell's Bill regarding the publication of books in British possessions which have been first published in the United Kingdom. We congratulate Mr. Morang who has worked so hard in this matter and we trust that Lord Monkswell's Bill will now soon pass into law.

FOURTH CONGRESS OF THE CHAMBERS OF COMMERCE OF THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

COPYRIGHT.

Moved by Mr. Geo. N. Morang, of Toronto,
Seconded by Hon. Thomas Fergus, of New Zealand.

WHEREAS the various Copyright Acts throughout the Empire are unnecessarily complicated and vexatious to certain dependencies, and WHEREAS it is now contemplated to consolidate the same by a Bill now before the House of Lords, RESOLVED therefore that this Congress declares its approval of such measure, whereby the Colonies are empowered to legislate for exclusive Copyright, and earnestly trusts that it may speedily become law.

NOTE.—The Section of the Act referred to is as follows:

SEC. 34.—In the case of a legislature of any British possession, if the following circumstances occur, that is to say:

> If a book has been first lawfully published in any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, and it is proved to the satisfaction of an officer appointed by the Government of such possession to receive such proofs that the owner of the copyright has lawfully granted either a license to import for sale in such British possession or a license to reproduce therein by any process an edition or editions of any such book designed for sale only in such British possession, it shall be lawful for the legislature of such possession by Act or ordinance to provide for the prohibition of the importation, except with the written consent of the licensee, into such possession of any copies of such book printed elsewhere, except under such license as aforesaid, except that two copies may be specially imported for the bonâ fide use of each of the public free libraries, of the university and college libraries, and law libraries of any duly organised law institution or society for the use of its members.

Where a license has been granted under this section for any British possession any copy of the book produced subject to such license shall, if found in any other part of Her Majesty's dominions, be deemed a pirated copy, and be treated accordingly.

Passed unanimously.

TRADE CHANGES.

The Cardiff branch of Wm. Dawson & Sons, Ltd., has been removed from 91 St. Mary Street, Cardiff, to more spacious and commodious premises in Hayes Buildings.

Owing to the retirement of Mr. Richard Amer, Messrs. Butterworth & Co. have taken over the Law Bookselling business that he has carried on for so many years at Lincoln's Inn Gate, Carey Street.

THE 'TIMES' HISTORY OF THE WAR.

'The most important history of the Transvaal war yet announced is to be published by Messrs. Sampson Low in the autumn. It will be the joint production of the special correspondents of the Times, under whose care it will be issued, and of several eminent specialists. Mr. L. S. Amery, Fellow of All Souls, Oxford, will be the editor. The work is expected to form five volumes of about 300 pages each, and it is hoped to make it the authoritative and adequate memorial of a war the importance of which cannot as yet be fairly estimated.'

DAILY TELEGRAPH.

THE REORGANISATION OF MESSRS. APPLETON & CO.

Last week we gave some particulars of the reorganisation of Messrs. D. Appleton & Co., with special reference to English creditors. The following additional information from the Publishers' Weekly gives the general scheme of reconstruction:—

The business of D. Appleton & Co., it is interesting to note, has continued without a break for seventy-five years, and its operations extend throughout the world. It owns outright 'Appleton's American Cyclopedia' and various other books and publications, besides thousands of copyrights. Its stereotype and electrotype book plates number over 1,000,000; its instalment contracts with subscribers to its publications number over 100,000.

The committee have supported their valuation and examination by the expert opinions of A. O. Kittredge, certified public accountant, as to all matters of account; George Haven Putnam and Irving Putnam, of G. P. Putnam's Sons, as to the valuation of the stereotype and electrotype book plates; Richard V. Harnett and A. B. Gritman, real estate experts, as to the value of the real estate; and by Oscar Roesen, of R. Hoe & Co., as to the value of the printing machinery and equipment. The committee finds that the assets exceed $3,200,000, itemised as follows:

Realty, Brooklyn Plant	$195,000
Equipment, Brooklyn Plant	162,920
Plates, &c.	856,909
Stock (Books and Sheets)	463,631
Paper and Supplies	115,436
Instalment Accounts	936,311
Advance Payments to Authors	34,607
Accounts Receivable	173,466
Cash	31,771
A. J. Johnson Co. Interest	239,915

The plan of reorganisation provides for the unifying of title and ownership of the three business establishments into the new corporation of D. Appleton & Co.

Six per cent. negotiable gold notes to the amount of $1,400,000 will be issued, interest payable semi-annually and secured by general mortgage upon all the fixed property. More than one-half of these notes will be delivered to creditors, in addition to 25 per cent. in cash. These notes will run for three years, upon the condition that they may be renewed for the additional period of two years, if within the first mentioned period 60 per cent. of the debt shall be paid.

Syndicate notes for $250,000 will be issued, running for a short period, and will be sold to the underwriting syndicate for the cash purposes of the plan.

The capital stock will be $3,000,000, of which $2,000,000 will be delivered to the present stockholders of D. Appleton & Co. upon full payment of the new obligations, and in the meantime will be held in trust by James G. Cannon, William Nelson Cromwell, A. D. Juilliard, Edmund C. Converse, and J. Hampden Dougherty, as trustees, to secure the further payment of the new obligations and also to vote thereon for such persons constituting a majority of the board of the new company as they shall deem advisable, and for such persons constituting a minority of the board as shall be nominated by the present stockholders of D. Appleton & Co. The $1,000,000 stock not held by the Appletons is to be used for 'such disposition as the reorganisation committee may find advantageous in the execution of the plan, including expenses of reorganisation.' Under the head of current assets the committee purposely allowed nothing for 'goodwill,' which oftentimes receives generous recognition in reorganisation schemes.

General creditors are to be paid 25 per cent. in cash and 75 per cent. in the 6 per cent. negotiable mortgage gold notes.

The preferred obligations, such as taxes, wages, interest on mortgages, royalties, &c., amounting to $176,698.78, are to be paid in full.

A cash working capital of $250,000 is to be provided.

It is believed that William W. Appleton will be made president of the new company, and James G. Cannon, chairman of the Board of Directors.

A reasonable time for realising upon the slow assets, without impairment of operations, is thus afforded for the benefit of the creditors, and the business and organisation is strengthened by the association of business advisers.

By legal proceedings simultaneously conducted in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Missouri, and California, all the properties have been placed under uniform receiverships, with J. Hampden Dougherty as the principal receiver, and upon application of counsel the court has authorised the continuance of the business in the interim, so that the business has been conducted without interruption and the goodwill and connections preserved.

THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.

INTERESTING CELEBRATION AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

On Friday, June 29, a déjeuner was given at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor to celebrate the completion of 'The Dictionary of National Biography,' and to meet the proprietor and editors. His lordship presided, and a large and distinguished company were present, including the United States Ambassador, Mr. George Smith, Mr. John Morley, M.P., Mr. Leslie Stephen, Mr. Sidney Lee, the Bishop of London, Viscount Peel, Lord Reay, Lord Acton, Mr. Leonard Courtney, M.P., Sir M. E. Grant Duff, Mr. Lecky, M.P., Professor C. E. Norton, Sir Theodore Martin, Sir E. Maunde Thompson, Professor Sir R. Jebb, M.P., Mr. S. Rawson Gardiner, Sir Alfred Lyall, Dr. J. A. H. Murray, Sir Clements Markham (President of the Royal Geographical Society), the Rev. Dr. Fowler (Vice-Chancellor of the University of Oxford), the Rev. Canon Ainger, Sir Spencer Walpole, Professor Aitchison, Sir Henry Craik, Sir M. Foster, M.P., Professor Dewar, Mr. G. Murray Smith, Sir George Murray, Mr. H. E. Murray, the Rev. Dr. Bonney, Sir Douglas Straight, Sir Squire Bancroft, Mr. Austin Dobson, the Rev. Dr. Rigg, Sir J. G. Fitch, Mr. Anthony Hope Hawkins, Mr. R. W. Gilder, Dr. Peile (Master of Christ's College, Cambridge), Professor J. K. Laughton, Mr. Moberly Bell, Mr. G. W. E. Russell, Dr. Garnett, C.B., Mr. James Knowles, Mr. Humphry Ward, Professor R. K. Douglas, Mr. Reginald Smith, Q.C., Mr. E. T. Cook, Dr. James Gairdner, Mr. Frederic Harrison, the Rev. Dr. Jessopp, the Rev. Professor Skeat, Professor York Powell, and Mr. Andrew Lang.

The toast of 'The Queen,' proposed by the Lord Mayor, having been drunk with enthusiasm,

Mr. John Morley proposed 'The Dictionary of National Biography,' and remarked, says the Times report, that in the opinion of hundreds of persons who were far more competent than he could pretend to be the work was one of the most enduring and one of the most important literary monuments of the time in which we lived. (Hear, hear.) He would ask them to associate the toast with the names of Mr. Sidney Lee—the present editor—and Mr. George Smith (cheers); but on his right there was one whose claim to be associated with the toast was not inferior to that of either of the other two—he referred to his friend, Mr. Leslie Stephen. (Cheers.) He did not think that too much could be said for the public spirit, the munificence, and the clear and persistent way in which the proprietor had carried out this great enterprise; and he deserved their thanks, not only because he had inspired a famous literary achievement, but also because he had done what in his (Mr. Morley's) view—and he believed in the view of the Lord Mayor—was an act of good citizenship of no ordinary quality or magnitude. (Cheers.) The Lord Mayor had spoken of the illustrious persons who had been commemorated in the dictionary during the reign of the Queen; and he (Mr. Morley) thought he had the pleasure of seeing before him the material for at least two large supplemental volumes by-and-by. (Laughter.) Meanwhile they could not but feel how great a service Mr. George Smith had rendered, not only to literature but to the country and the fame of the country. (Cheers.) In other countries there had been great dictionaries of national biography, but he believed that, as a rule, all those undertakings had been conducted either under Government patronage or under a patronage which was quasi-governmental. In the present case the enterprise was due to the disinterested zeal of a single private citizen in its inception, and in its execution it was due to a band of men who had gathered round the dictionary, and who had felt no responsibility to any governmental body; their responsibility had been to one another, and to their own principle of good, truthful, and accurate work. (Cheers.) The facts of the dictionary were well known, he was sure, to all of them—how the operations began in 1882, how the first volume appeared in January 1885, and how it was completed in the midsummer of the year 1900. The punctuality with which each quarter—as if it were an official salary (laughter)—a volume of the dictionary had been delivered to them was, he thought, a phenomenon unparalleled in the history of dictionaries or the making or circulation of books; and, as one not entirely unversed in these operations, he envied the feeling of satisfaction with which Mr. George Smith, Mr. Leslie Stephen, and Mr. Sidney Lee faced them all that day. He was with Mr. Stephen when this enterprise was first embarked upon, and he confessed that he at that time regretted that Mr. Smith had not proposed to make the work a dictionary of universal biography; but looking back, and viewing the triumph now achieved, he thought he had been distinctly in error, and that Mr. Smith and Mr. Stephen were right in confining their task to national biography.

MR. GEORGE M. SMITH

Head of the Firm of Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

Continuing, Mr. Morley said he had been a constant reader of the dictionary, and a subscriber, too, he might say; and he declared it possessed the rare quality of being both a valuable and a delightful book—a book both to read and to use, a book which both interested and instructed a casual reader and served and furthered the serious student; and he ventured in the name of all present to offer his own and their congratulations to the proprietor and to the editors of the book, which had been boldly conceived, wisely planned, zealously and strenuously executed, and carried that day to a happy and triumphant completion. (Cheers.)

Mr. George M. Smith, in reply, thanked Mr. Morley for the kind way in which he had proposed the toast, and the company for the cordial manner in which they had received it. He did not think that the proprietor or editors of a work of literature had ever before been entertained by the chief citizen of the greatest city in the world. He ventured to say that the Lord Mayor deserved the gratitude of all men of letters for the example he had given; and he hoped that his lordship had done something towards removing a reproach which had been cast on our country—that it never afforded any public recognition of literary enterprise, be it never so valuable or useful to the nation. If, however, the occasion were unprecedented, there was this to be said—that 'The Dictionary of National Biography' was an unprecedented work. As far as he knew, no work of the like extent, involving so much laborious research, so much anxious care, had ever been produced in this country. (Hear, hear.) And he ventured to predict that the dictionary would long remain a unique work. Eighteen years of unremitting effort, of continuous anxiety, to say nothing of fiscal considerations, were not lightly ventured on. As to the last point, he was told that there had been some curiosity, and he would so far take the present company into his confidence as to say that if anyone desired to produce a work of the like magnitude and of a similar character, he should be prepared for the expenditure of a sum which could not be stated under six figures, and the second figure must be a four or a five. If, first and last, he got back from the sales of the supposed work a sum equal to rather more than one-half of the amount of his expenditure, he might regard himself as fairly fortunate. But, after all, there were things which could not have been accomplished by the mere expenditure of money, however lavish, and one of these things was 'The Dictionary of National Biography.' (Hear, hear.) In order to produce such a work at least three things were requisite—considerable experience, a certain kind of knowledge, and good fortune. As regarded the first two requisites, he might mention that before the dictionary was thought of by him, he had had nearly forty years' experience as a publisher, and he had been engaged in various enterprises which had given him some insight into the manner in which such a work as the dictionary should and, as he had fondly hoped, could be produced. He had been fully aware of the difficulties of the task, and they had sometimes seemed to him almost insuperable, as they had been deemed wholly insuperable by others who had had a laudable desire to supply a long-felt want in our national literature. As regarded the last and most important requisite, good fortune, that, he was thankful to say, had attended him from first to last in regard to the dictionary. When his old and tried friend Mr. Leslie Stephen, of whose ability as an editor, a writer, a critic, it would be superfluous for him to say anything, was not only interested in the project, but was willing to accept the responsibility of editing the work, he felt that he was indeed fortunate. About two years before the first volume appeared Mr. Leslie Stephen laid down the lines on which the work should be produced—lines which have been scrupulously adhered to ever since. He gathered around him a staff of distinguished men of letters, who were impressed by the idea of the work and willing to associate themselves with it. Mr. Leslie Stephen edited the first twenty-one volumes of the dictionary, and he wrote for it a large number of most important and interesting articles. The engrossing labour unfortunately affected his health and he was forced to relinquish the editorship. But his friend continued to take a warm practical interest in the work, and he wrote for every volume, or nearly every volume, up to the last which was published that day. (Cheers.) Mr. Stephen's resignation was a severe blow to him (Mr. Smith), but again his good fortune attended him. Happily for the interests of the dictionary, and happily for him (Mr. Smith), Mr. Leslie Stephen had at the very beginning, with rare judgment and perception, chosen for his chief assistant editor a young graduate of the University of Oxford, who was about leaving Balliol College, and when Mr. Stephen's health obliged him to resign the editorship, an entirely competent successor was found in Mr. Sidney Lee. (Cheers.) Mr. Lee had edited forty-two volumes of the dictionary and had brought it to a conclusion. How successfully he had followed in the footsteps of Mr. Leslie Stephen had never been questioned. Mr. John Morley, who has had a wide experience as an editor, had given them the opinion of an expert on that point. Besides so ably editing the dictionary, Mr. Lee had contributed very largely to its columns; he has in fact written more pages of the dictionary than any other contributor. Mr. Sidney Lee had written the longest article which has appeared in the dictionary—the biography of Shakespeare, which had surprised the world by the fulness and coherence of its information; and though certain of its views and conclusions had had to run the gauntlet of controversy, it had been acknowledged to be the best biographical account yet written of the greatest man of letters of any age or country. (Cheers.) In his selection of his assistant editors Mr. Lee had exercised a sound judgment, Mr. Kingsford, Mr. Archbold, Mr. Secombe, Mr. Pollard, and Mr. Carlyle had all done excellent work as assistant editors and contributors. 'The Dictionary of National Biography' compared advantageously with works of a similar kind—not by any means inconsiderable works—which had been produced or were in course of publication on the Continent of Europe. The volumes of those works had appeared irregularly at long intervals, and they were of unequal merit. They had all in one shape or another, directly or indirectly, been subsidised by the respective Governments. Among other distinctions they claim for 'The Dictionary of National Biography' that of regular and punctual publication. (Cheers.) It was announced at the beginning that the volumes would appear quarterly, and a volume had been published every quarter on the appointed day. Not one volume had been twelve hours behind its time. (Cheers.) They were not a little proud of this achievement, which showed what could be accomplished by really good editorship and a perfect organisation. The dictionary was almost as interesting to a large proportion of the citizens of the United States of America (cheers)—who find in it a record of the deeds of their forefathers—as to our own countrymen. He knew that the American Ambassador felt a genuine interest in their work. (Cheers.) The dictionary would, Mr. Smith continued, never be superseded, it would last as long as the English language. So important and interesting a work would find a place in the literary history of our time, and when that history came to be written the significant fact that the Lord Mayor of London had assembled this distinguished company to celebrate the completion of the work would be recorded to his honour. It would be difficult for him adequately to express the gratification afforded to the editors and himself by that entertainment. He would not attempt to do so; he would simply offer to the Lord Mayor their warmest thanks for his splendid hospitality, and for the honour he had conferred on them. (Cheers.)

Mr. Sidney Lee, in responding to the toast, observed that Dr. Johnson had said that an author might aspire to praise, but an editor of a dictionary could only hope to escape reproach, and even that negative recompense was vouchsafed to very few. If the Doctor had made his way into this room, those present would have given him a very striking object lesson in the growth of magnanimity among his countrymen—at any rate, in their attitude towards editors of dictionaries. (Hear, hear.) Long experience of the dictionary had, he thought, implanted in him a reasonable affection for strict accuracy of statement, and he did not wish to be credited with anything that was not strictly true. He must always remember that he had learned to be an editor under Mr. Stephen's tuition, and that he had carried on, as well as he had been able to, the tradition that Mr. Stephen created. (Cheers.) Of Mr. Smith's munificence and public spirit they had already learned. But it was essential for him (Mr. Lee) to bear in mind that this work would never have reached a successful termination but for the enthusiastic devotion to it of the contributors—the writers of the articles.

The Bishop of London and the United States Ambassador also made interesting speeches.

FAVOURITE NOVELS.

Munsey's Magazine, which is now making an appeal to British readers, contains at least one feature of literary interest. This is a series of articles by well-known writers on their favourite novels. Last month Sir Walter Besant discoursed pleasantly of 'Huckleberry Finn,' and this month Ian Maclaren describes his tastes in fiction. His two favourite stories are 'Esmond' and 'The Heart of Midlothian.' The points of comparison and difference are noted. The heroes, for example, are totally dissimilar, but Dr. Watson thinks the rivalry must be decided by the heroines. 'Leave out,' he says, 'Henry Esmond and Reuben Butler, leave out all the accidents and circumstances, and let the women stand together.' That done, he asks: 'Soul for soul, which was the greater, Rachel or Jean?' After noting Thackeray's greatness, he pays this tribute to Scott: 'Jeanie has her great moments also, and if a peasant girl, homely of thought and face, busy, year in, year out, with the feeding of cows and the making of butter, should slip this common slough and rise to heroism and eloquence, and should do so after a convincing fashion, as a humble plant bursts into bloom, this is a masterpiece of creative art. It was the tragedy of Effie, who as a beautiful, vain, kind-hearted rustic beauty is very real, but not at all natural in her impossible transformation into a grand lady, which revealed Jeanie and brought her loyal, honest, unconquerable nature to its height. Was there ever anything stronger than the struggle in her breast between love and conscience, when a lie, a white, semi lie, a mere turn of words, a pardonable prevarication in the witness box, would have saved her sister's life? . . . Never did fiction reinforce morality more splendidly, never did a woman carry herself in sore straits more bravely. Jeanie has now a certain high carriage, which belongs not to rank and titles, but to integrity and worth.'

. . . 'Jean is supported by certain choice types of Scots character, which take a firm hold of the mind as no subordinate "Esmond" or any of Thackeray's novels ever can, for the side figures with Thackeray were flunkies and such like, while the humblest person who came from Scott's hand had his own individuality and character. Within this book there is Dumbiedykes, unwilling of speech, careful of the money, yet capable of a generous action on occasion, patient in his hopeless wooing, much tried by his pony and by his housekeeper, a type of the slow, silent, thrifty Scot. And here also we find Mr. Saddletree, who left his lawful business to his distressed wife and gave himself to law, revelling in pleadings, bad Latin, and pedantic argumentations, without delicacy of feeling, the type of the pragmatical, pottering, litigious Scot.

'But after Jean herself the glory of my loved novel is David Deans, who incarnates the theological mania of his people in its subtle distinctions, immovable self-confidence, provincial isolation, utter conscientiousness, and heroic courage. As he testifies against "right-hand extremes and left-hand defections," delivers himself both with regard to Puritan sectaries and an Erastian Kirk of Scotland, and holds his family in a stern grip which hindered them from many an innocent joy but did not save them from worse things, yet with depths of tenderness in his heart and a genius for practical affairs—"they who break down the carved work of our Sion may be sawing the craft wi' aits, but I say pease"—behold the Scot who is often disliked and sometimes laughed at, but who is never despised, and always succeeds.

'But the Heart of Midlothian is Jeanie, who is the strongest woman in the gallery of Scott.'

It may be noted that Ian Maclaren is comprehensively described as 'the Scottish novelist, clergyman, and lecturer.'

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'Comrades True,' by Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip). It is very pleasant to see the name of this authoress on a title-page again, and it reminds us of many pleasant hours spent in the society of her characters. In her present work the incisive style and vigorous portrayal of stirring incidents are happily apparent as of yore, and those who once become interested in the doings of young Lord St. David after his succession to the title are hardly likely to relax their attention until the last chapter of the story is reached. Perhaps the love interest is planned out a little too transparently, for from the very first it is easy to see that Lord St. Errol will marry Mrs. Clifford, the singer, while his friend Stanley will pair off with Stella St. Errol; but this is a fault we may be sure that will readily be forgiven by the younger and more romantic class of novel-readers. The story, though showing some deficiencies of style, is exceedingly readable throughout, and those who are fond of animals will be glad to learn that a dog occupies a prominent position in the narrative, acting his part with a dignity and self-possession that might well be envied by more intellectual mortals.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Ascent of Mount St. Elias (Alaska) by H.R.H. Prince Luigi Amadeo di Savoia, Duke of the Abruzzi,' narrated by Filippo de' Filippi, illustrated by Vittorio Sella, and translated by Signora Linda Villari, with the author's supervision. This handsome volume with its profusion of beautiful illustrations is a wonderful tribute to the attractions of mountain-climbing, and infects the reader with much of that enthusiasm, which once having got hold of the Alpinist never seems to desert him so long as he has health and agility to prosecute his explorations. After some few preliminary preparations and short journeys, we accompany Prince Luigi from Liverpool on the Cunard liner 'Lucania' to New York. Under the excellent escort of Senor Filippo de' Filippi we are thus taken in the Prince's train to San Francisco, and so on to Seattle, where a steamboat is on hand to convey us to Sitka, the capital of Alaska. Thence we travel to Gunean, and on reaching Yakutat begin indeed to feel that we are in sight of the promised land. Chapter IV. supplies us with a history of Mount St. Elias, while succeeding sections treat of the Malaspina, Seward, Agassiz, and Newton Glaciers. Chapter VIII. is devoted to the actual accent of Mount St. Elias, and in Chapter IX. we find ourselves on our return to Yakutat, and before long are safely in home territory again. We can say that we have spent a most enjoyable time in H.R.H. Prince Luigi's company, even if it has only been at second hand, and we are warmly appreciative of the numerous and exquisite illustrations that have aided our excursion. The volume, in short, is worthy of the highest praise, and artist, bookbinder, paper-maker, and printer have nobly vied with each other to assist the author in making it a success. The maps are an especially noteworthy feature of the production.

From Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls.—'Cyclopædia of Classified Dates,' by Charles E. Little. Here is a volume of great magnitude, which enlists from the reviewer a word of sympathy even before its contents have been explored. The labour entailed by such a production must indeed have been immense. It is intended, as a sub-title informs us, 'for the use of students of history and for all persons who desire speedy access to the facts and events which relate to the histories of the various countries of the world, from the earliest recorded dates.' The classification of the dates is arranged on a threefold system, firstly by countries or geographical distinction; secondly, by time or period; and thirdly, according to the nature of the event, thus answering the respective queries 'where? when? what?' The volume is thus very capable of ready reference, and should be a boon to those whose employment in life necessitates the constant verification of historical facts. It should also result in a great saving of time, which to the busy literary man is a matter of no small consequence. In regard to the accuracy of the work, it seems, so far as we are able to judge—for necessarily such a work requires to be frequently consulted for days before a fair idea of its reliability can be obtained—to be compiled with great care and skill, and the Rev. Charles E. Little, whose love of statistics must really be marvellous to have caused him to attempt such a great task, is to be congratulated on the excellent results of his labours.

From Mr. L. Upcott Gill.—'Seaside Watering Places: a Description of Holiday Resorts on the Coasts of England and Wales, the Channel Islands, and the Isle of Man.' This useful guide to seaside resorts has been greatly improved in its successive editions, and the twenty-fourth annual issue which is now presented represents the accumulated editorial wisdom of years. It supplies, so far as we are able to judge, a very fair description of the different watering places aided by a large number of illustrations; and if here and there apparently trivial details are introduced, we have to remember that all human kind is not constructed on the same model, and that the writer of a popular guide book has a variety of tastes to cater for. A rather objectionable feature to our mind is the frequent appearance of the advertiser. Still, it is useful to know where pleasant apartments with a fine sea view and the use of a piano can be obtained; also which is the best chemist, baker and confectioner, greengrocer, dairyman, mineral-water maker, and shoemaker in the town; and where the finest butter and eggs can be procured. We notice that in one instance the name of a pawnbroker—presumably the most liberal of his class—is given in the local directory. That also may be a convenient piece of information.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'Love and Mr. Lewisham,' by H. G. Wells. The reader will be a little disappointed who expects to find in this story a renewal of the scientific fantasies with which Mr. Wells has delighted us in his previous works. There is here no looking forward into the future, no whimsical speculations on the future of mankind, but the present everyday world is treated of, with the nature of the human beings that inhabit it. On the whole we like Mr. Wells in his serious, rational moods best. Not, of course, that 'Love and Mr. Lewisham' is by any means wanting in humour; on the contrary, there are touches here and there in the author's happiest vein. But taken as a whole it is more earnest than most of his novels, and concerns the problems of life more directly. The reader will find as he progresses with his perusal of the book that the love attachments of the young schoolmaster and South Kensington student have an increasing interest for him, and that the character of the girl, in its ever-varying feminine phases, possesses an absorbing attraction. The early scenes of Mr. Lewisham's wooing are depicted with almost idyllic charm, and they are skilfully contrasted with the sentiments and emotions that fill his breast after marriage. The novel is one that is certain to attract a considerable amount of attention.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'Bequeathed,' by Beatrice Whitby. There is no great display of passion in this novel; it may, indeed, be termed a simple story, but it is very charming nevertheless. Miss Whitby has the power of interesting her readers in the more ordinary events of life, and these appeal with far greater force to the average reader than any chronicles of smart society or sensational incident. There is really little plot to dissect; the attraction of the story lies in the telling, and this is of no ordinary kind. We feel in reading the book that the characters are of real flesh and blood, not creatures of perverted brain power with an unholy attraction for the abnormal. Those who can appreciate quiet touches of character, with a study of life in its calmer aspects, will thoroughly enjoy this novel.

From Messrs. Jarrold & Sons.—'In the Promised Land: a Novel,' by Henry R. Sienkiewicz. It is rather a depressing story of bitter disappointment and wrecked hopes the author has to tell. Deluded by the plausible statements of a German emigrant steamship agent, who is a species of Scadder, and who promises them all kinds of territorial and other advantages in the future, two Polish peasants, Lorenz Toporck and his daughter Mary, leave their own country and sail for America, where all these good things are to be found. So simple are they that when New York is within sight the man actually plans out the location of his new estate, which he has decided shall be just on the outskirts of the city, and in his own mind he has already risen to the position of a large landed proprietor. From this day dream they have, of course, a terrible awakening, and in a very short time we find them wandering about the streets of New York homeless and starving. All their sufferings, however, are borne with the stoical submission typical of the Polish peasant nature, and when they are rescued, almost as it would seem from the jaws of death, by a kind-hearted compatriot and supplied with money to reach a new colony in Arkansas then forming, they return thanks to the Almighty for His great goodness and calmly prepare themselves for the new venture. This turns out no more prosperously than their first essay, and, the settlement being broken up through internal dissensions and disease, Mary, who has lost her father, manages after many exciting experiences to struggle back to New York, there to seek aid from their generous benefactor, as she has been instructed to do. But he too, she finds, is dead, and his family have left the city and have gone no one knows where. So poor Mary is again homeless and friendless in New York, with nothing to solace her but the thoughts of her old time lover in Lipintse, whom she fondly believes is still true to her. Eventually the strain of circumstances is too much for her; gradually, day by day becoming weaker from the want of food and the other necessaries of life, she at last loses her reason, for a time wanders about smiling and apparently talking to her peasant lover, and then one day is found dead and cold at the end of one of the dock piers. It will thus be seen that the story is very gloomy throughout, but it is related with vivid intensity. The translation is by S. C. de Soissons.

From Kelly's Directories, Limited, 182 High Holborn, W.C.—'Kelly's Directory of Stationers, Printers, Booksellers, Publishers, and Paper Makers in England, Scotland and Wales, the Principal Towns in Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man.' It is the fate of all works of this description to go on increasing in bulk in their successive issues, and we are therefore not surprised to find from the preface to this useful volume that in this, the eighth edition, there are close upon 10,000 more names than in the last edition. This the editor seems to think shows a very satisfactory condition of the trades concerned, but there are more ways of looking at the subject than one, and over-competition is sometimes disastrous in its effects. Of the book itself we can speak as heretofore in terms of high praise. It is well arranged, clearly printed, and, so far as we have been able to discover, exceedingly accurate. Here and there an error creeps in—as in the case of the now extinct firm of Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co. among the publishers—but taken on the whole it is wonderfully reliable, and no slight amount of labour and care has evidently been expended on its preparation.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'The Increasing Purpose,' by James Lane Allen. This is certainly not every fiction-reader's novel, but for those who have a mind above the contemplation of mere superficialities it will afford a fund of quiet, earnest enjoyment. Mr. Allen as a writer of fiction is not without his faults. A passionate lover of Nature in her many ever-varying aspects, he is apt to lay too much stress on the scenic adornment of his novels, with the result that the human figures who move upon his pastoral stage are liable to be dwarfed and overbalanced by the weight of their surroundings. It is not of the story proper, the characterisation and human interest, that the reader afterwards thinks when he lays the book down, as of a wonderfully vivid description of country life, the passing away amid glistening raindrops and bright sunshine of a storm, or the appearance of the farm lands under the visitation of wintry weather. The story Mr. Allen has to tell in 'The Increasing Purpose' is not marked by much originality. A young man, the son of a humble farmer in Kentucky, is animated by a desire to go to the new University at Lexington and be trained for the ministry. So he matriculates at the Bible College, and the first result of the awakening of his intelligence is that he has doubts about the truth of the Scriptures. Eventually he is expelled from the College on account of his Agnostic views, and returns home to bear the scornful reproaches of his parents, who have saved and hoarded in order to provide the boy with the necessary means for this education. He finds relief in reading the works of Darwin, Spencer, and others, but better than all there presently comes along a sweet, delicately nurtured girl, who by her trustful God-fearing principles, without trace of dogmatism of any kind, supplies exactly the solace that this perplexed young unbeliever needs. It will thus be seen that the elements of the plot are tolerably familiar. But Mr. Allen has given us a new setting for ancient material, and has inspired fresh interest in the narrative by the warm colouring imparted to the intellectual and emotional struggles through which the young student, David, passes. If occasionally there seems to be a superfluity of glowing language, and the surroundings overbalance the human interest, this is a failing, it should be remembered, that all readers will not view alike, and that many will be indisposed to regard as a failing at all.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Seafarers,' by John Bloundelle-Burton. Perhaps the author of this story is a little too partial, after an old-established method, to hinting at the commencement of the narrative to the experiences that are to befall his heroine, but it must at least be said that they quite come up to expectation. They are, indeed, 'strange, horrible, and fantastic.' Mr. Bloundelle-Burton possesses a cheery, vigorous style that carries the reader over the surprising events of the story with quite fascinating rapidity, and in fact he is left little time to breathe or consider such trivial matters as probability until the last stage of the story is reached. If 'The Seafarers' cannot quite favourably compare in its general merits with some of the previous stories the author has written, it has at any rate the notable distinction of being full of life and absorbing incident.

From Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'Oliver Cromwell and the Future of the Puritans in England,' by Charles Firth, M.A. Few historical characters present so interesting a personality and furnish so many features for discussion as the Lord Protector. Mr. Firth, it may at once be said, has done full justice to his subject in this work. Commencing with an account of his early life, he next describes the condition of State affairs which obtained in this country during the eleven years, 1629–1640, when Cromwell was practically an obscure individual. But if matters were apparently quiescent, there was a great preparation going on for the stirring times that were to come; the seed was sown that in after years should yield an abundant crop. In the following chapter Mr. Firth shows how when the Long Parliament came into power matters rapidly came to a head, with the result that the country was soon agitated by a civil war, and England was divided into two opposing parties, respectively formed by the supporters of the King and the Parliament. From this point Mr. Firth treats in successive chapters of the first campaign, Cromwell in the Eastern Association, the battles of Marston Moor, Naseby, and Langport, the respective positions of Presbyterians and Independents at this period, the Second Civil War, the part that Cromwell took in the King's execution, the republic and its enemies, the foundation of the Protectorate, Cromwell's domestic policy, and so forth. He sums up the character of Cromwell in these words: 'Either as a soldier or as a statesman Cromwell was far greater than any Englishman of his time, and he was both soldier and statesman in one. We must look to Cæsar or Napoleon to find a parallel for this union of high political and military ability in one man. Cromwell was not as great a man as Cæsar or Napoleon, and he played his part on a smaller stage, but he "bestrode the narrow world" of Puritan England "like a Colossus."' The interest of the volume is greatly enhanced by a large number of illustrations, the majority being portraits, while there are also several maps. It is a work worthy to be ranked with the best of the 'Heroes of the Nations' series, of which it forms the latest issue.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Devil's Kitchen,' by A. B. Louis. The holiday-making of young people is always rather enlivening, though whether it is quite sufficient, even when intermingled with a certain amount of love entanglement, to furnish the substance for a novel is another matter. It is with holiday-making, however, that this story opens, and at first everything promises well, the party being planned out in couples in almost transparent fashion; but eventually there turns up on the scene that quiet, apparently unattractive mysterious woman who in the realms of fiction is born to make mischief. She is the sister of a publisher, one Arnold Mallinson, and there is also an author in the company, round whose projected novel 'The Devil's Kitchen' the chief interest of the story revolves. The book, brightly and pleasantly written, ends rather dismally, for, though the novel when published proves a great success, the unfortunate and hitherto undistinguished author dies in the moment of his triumph. 'The Devil's Kitchen' can scarcely be termed a powerful work, but it will agreeably interest that class of romantic fiction reader who objects in his literary recreation to any great mental strain.

From the same.—'A Cricketer on Cricket,' by W. J. Ford. Mr. Ford discourses in this volume on many interesting features of the game, and from his wide experience and technical knowledge is able to make his observations thoroughly readable. Of the general character of the work some idea may be obtained from the titles of the different chapters: 'The Position of the Professional,' 'Captains,' 'The Humours of Cricket,' 'Some Memorable Test Matches,' &c. As an after-dinner companion for the cricket enthusiast nothing better could be desired.

From Messrs. Seeley & Co.—'Our Fleet To-day, and its Development during the Last Half-Century,' by Captain S. Eardley-Wilmot, R.N. This is a revised edition of the author's previous work, 'The Development of Navies during the Last Half-Century.' In that work, it may be remembered, the changes that had taken place in the principal fleets of the whole world within recent years were reviewed. When the present volume was taken in hand with the object of bringing the information up to date, it was seen that the subject was too wide in its dimensions to admit of being satisfactorily treated in one volume, and it has therefore been considered advisable to eliminate the chapters on foreign navies altogether, and to confine the book to a history of the developments of our fleet from 1840 to the present day. This accordingly has been done, and the volume as now constituted presents a very interesting account of the growth of the British Navy since the first fitting out of the 'Vernon,' the 'Pique,' and the 'Vanguard.' A large number of illustrations form a marked attraction of the work.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—'The Chicamon Stone,' by Clive Phillipps-Wolley. Here we have an exciting story of adventure in Alaska, the interest chiefly depending upon the search after a mysterious ledge where gold in profusion is to be found. The Chicamon Stone is the name given to a piece of specimen rock, weighing about a couple of pounds, which has been procured from this ledge, and sold by an Indian siwash to the keeper of a store at Wrangel for fifty dollars. This specimen, honeycombed with gold, is shown by the keeper of the stone to two unscrupulous prospectors, who reward his confidence by subsequently stealing the rock; and from this time there is a thrilling pursuit after Siyah Joe, the possessor of the secret where the wonderful ledge is. There are two parties in the search, respectively animated by good and bad motives, and by the former of these Joe is soon found. But there follows a battle-royal between the two forces, and the succession of events as each endeavours to obtain the upper hand is most exciting. The reader of Mr. Phillipps-Wolley's story will certainly not be likely to pause in his perusal for want of stimulating material.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Rhymer,' by Allan M'Aulay. Robert Burns was guilty of many misdeeds during his lifetime, and if the action attributed to him in this story of making mischief between a young country girl and her lover were true it would probably add but little to the weight of his iniquity. The young girl in question is one Alison Graham, the eldest in a family of seven lassies, who is in great danger of being married to a very unprepossessing but well-to-do elderly suitor named Cheape. From this situation she is rescued by Mistress Nancy Maclehose, an Edinburgh friend of her mother, who carries Alison off to the Modern Athens. Nancy Maclehose is a lively vivacious little woman with an assumption of great good nature and deep feeling; but, as so frequently happens, it is an assumption and nothing more—a woman who would pathetically weep over her two little boys and yet neglect their material comforts. She is romantic, too, and with a soul for poetry idolises Robert Burns, at that time living in Edinburgh. Contrasted with Nancy is her cousin, Archibald Herries, the lawyer, who is as cold and reserved as she is all enthusiasm and gush. Needless to say, however, that he has by far the better nature at bottom. Herries learns to appreciate the good qualities of Alison's honest disposition and ends by falling passionately in love with her, but being, like so many men of a quiet and studious habit, very suspicious, he is easily led, through the machinations of Burns and one of his cronies, to have doubts of the girl's good faith. The truth is Alison has been employed by the infatuated Nancy as the bearer of one of her love epistles to the poet. All misconceptions are cleared away at the close of the narrative, but not before sufficient time has elapsed to teach Herries, it is to be hoped, a very wholesome lesson. The story is simple in character, but has many good points.

New Editions.—From Mr. L. Upcott Gill we have received the third edition of that very clever book, 'Sleight of Hand: a Practical Manual of Legerdemain for Amateurs and others,' by Edwin T. Sachs. The work has been thoroughly revised and brought up to date, a new chapter being added containing some of the more recent sleight-of-hand tricks. There are many illustrations; but we think in a volume of this character, where so much depends on description, they might have been even still further amplified.—Mr. W. B. Clive has issued a fifth edition of 'Latin Composition,' by A. H. Allcroft, M.A., and J. H. Haydon, M.A. The matter has been carefully revised and reset throughout, but the paragraph numbers have not been interfered with. The volume is calculated to be of the utmost assistance to the young student. The same publisher has also sent out a fourth edition of the 'Tutorial Latin Grammar,' by B. J. Hayes, M.A., and W. F. Masom, M.A. The book is arranged in such clear and intelligible form as shall be of the greatest advantage to the student, without burdening his mind with a number of old-fashioned forms and usages. Nothing that is of practical consequence is omitted, but it has been endeavoured as far as possible to simplify the subject, and to render its comprehension a matter of easy achievement.—Messrs. Luzac & Co. have issued a second edition, revised and enlarged, of 'Facts and Fancies about Java,' by Augusta De Wit. The book is brightly written, and contains much in regard to the native life, customs, &c., of the Javanese that is extremely interesting. In her description of the people and their surroundings the author is greatly assisted by a number of excellent illustrations.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

 In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo. royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = 2½ centimètres.

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of he most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

New and Valuable Books

HORSELESS VEHICLES
AUTOMOBILES AND MOTOR CYCLES

Operated by Steam, Hydro-Carbon, Electric, and Pneumatic Motors

By GARDNER D. HISCOX, M.E.

Author of 'Gas, Gasoline, and Oil Engines,' and 'Mechanical Movements, Powers, Devices, and Appliances.'

Large 8vo. 432 Pages. 315 Illustrations. Handsomely bound in cloth.

Price . . . . . 14s. net.

A Practical Treatise for Automobilists, Manufacturers, Capitalists, Investors, Promoters, and everyone interested in the development, care, and use of the Automobile.

This work is written on a broad basis, and comprises in its scope a full description with illustrations, and details, of the progress and manufacturing advance of one of the most important innovations of the times, contributing to the pleasure and business convenience of mankind.

The makeup and management of Automobile Vehicles of all kinds are very liberally treated, and in a way that will be appreciated by those who are reaching out for a better knowledge of this new era in locomotion.

This book is up to date and very fully illustrated with various types of Horseless Carriages, Automobiles, and Motor Cycles, with many details of the same.

It also contains a complete list of the Automobile and Motor Manufacturers, with their addresses, as well as a list of patents issued since 1856 on the Automobile industry.

GAS ENGINE CONSTRUCTION

A Practical Treatise Describing in Every Detail the Actual Building of a Gas Engine.

By HENRY V. A. PARSELL, Jr., Member A. I. Electrical Engineers,

AND

ARTHUR J. WEED, Mechanical Engineer.

Large 8vo. Very fully Illustrated. Nearly 300 Pages. Handsomely bound in cloth.

Price . . . . . 14s. net.

This book treats of the subject more from the standpoint of practice than that of theory. The principles of operation of Gas Engines are clearly and simply described, and then the actual construction of a half-horse power engine is taken up, step by step, showing in detail the making of a Gas Engine.

First come directions for making the patterns; this is followed by all the details of the mechanical operations of finishing up and fitting the castings. This is profusely illustrated with engravings of the actual work in progress, showing the modes of chucking, turning, boring and finishing the parts in the lathe, and also plainly showing the lining up and erection of the engine.

Dimensioned working drawings give clearly the sizes and forms of the various details.

The entire engine, with the exception of the fly-wheels, is designed to be made on a simple eight-inch lathe, with slide rests.

The book closes with a chapter on American practice in Gas Engine design and gives simple rules so that anyone can figure out the dimensions of similar engines of other powers.

☞ Every illustration in this book is new and original, having been made expressly for this work.

Some time ago Professor Lombroso startled the world with the theory that genius means degeneration; and now Dr. Grasset, the well-known professor of the faculty of medicine at Montpellier University, publishes through Coulet et Fils, Paris, an almost equally startling work, entitled 'La supériorité intellectuelle et la névrose.' Dr. Grasset's theory is that neurosis is the price paid for intellectual superiority, and he supports his argument by some very striking examples. Let us cull a few of these as illustrating the dangers of the intellectual life. Auguste Comte, founder of the sect of Positivists, went out of his mind while teaching, and, leaving his class, wandered aimlessly through the streets and did not return home. His letters were loosely written and incoherent. After attempting to throw his wife into the lake of Enghien, Comte was confined in Dr. Esquirol's private lunatic asylum, and while there stabbed one of the keepers in the face with a fork and committed countless extravagant acts. Rousseau showed frequent symptoms of mental aberration. At one time he imagined himself a very exalted personage, then suddenly thought himself the victim of persecution, and would precipitately take flight from inns, leaving behind him all his belongings. He saw even in the elements proof positive of a universal conspiracy to work his ruin. His enemies were everywhere, and he feared to eat in case the cook might have been bribed to put poison in his food. He wrote a vindication of himself which he gave to those whom he thought to be favourably disposed towards him. At last he wrote a very tender and familiar letter to God, which he intended placing upon the altar of the Cathedral of Notre-Dame at Paris, but, finding the gate closed, he was convinced that Heaven itself was shut against him and hostile to him.

Schopenhauer, whose views have sometimes been advocated for their remarkable sanity, also suffered from imaginary persecutors. He gesticulated and talked loudly while walking through the streets and behaved very eccentrically at table; and one day, hearing his landlord talking in the next room, went in and struck him, breaking his arm. He assaulted messengers who brought him notes on which his name was spelt Schoppenhauer. He burnt his beard instead of using a razor, and hid bank-notes under his bedclothes and gold in his inkstand. Fearing that his manuscript notes might be stolen he wrote them in Greek, Latin, or Sanscrit, and secreted them in his books. He thought that all professors of philosophy were joined in a conspiracy against him, and, when he made his will, made his dog and the soldiers' residuary legatees. It will be remembered that intellectual pressure, the abuse of stimulants—especially ether—and a generally irregular mode of life combined to derange the mind of that brilliant story-teller, Guy de Maupassant, who ended his days in a lunatic asylum.

The author of 'Salammbo' suffered from epilepsy, and had terrible attacks which occurred suddenly and without apparent cause. Flaubert used suddenly to turn deathly pale, while he felt flames of fire passing through his eyes so that he could scarcely see; then his face would become bloodless and his features assume a look of desperation, and running towards his bed he would throw himself gloomily and despairingly upon it, becoming a prey to terrible crises of epilepsy which seemed to crush his limbs and prostrate his nervous system, leaving him in a debilitated and shattered condition for many days. One of the few who have succeeded in curing themselves of neurosis was the author of 'Paul and Virginia.' Bernardin de Saint-Pierre, like Jean Jacques Rousseau, believed himself surrounded by enemies bent on his destruction, but eventually he overcame this terrible mental affliction.

These are but a few examples of degeneration given by Dr. Grasset, whose volume is exceedingly suggestive, if also rather disquieting. But it may be noted that his 'cases' are all drawn from the ranks of men of third-rate intellect. Shakespeare, so far as is known, showed no aberration except in doing everything better than any one else. Goethe, too, was perfectly sane, and there is not so much as a trace of insanity or degeneration in all the works of Homer. Dante and Milton, Bacon and Newton were also perfectly rational. In fact, the kings and princes of literature and science have ever been remarkable for their sanity—that is to say, their common sense. Genius in its highest manifestations is but sublimated common sense. And common sense is precisely what your degenerate lacks. Generally speaking, he likewise lacks humour, which has been aptly called the balance wheel of the mind. But Lombroso and De Grasset seem to prove that literary men of third-rate quality are frequently liable to mental trouble of various kinds. On the other hand, investigation would probably show that literary men are not more liable to go wrong in the head than the members of any other trade or profession.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

A book that should attract attention among humanitarians and those who are interested in the welfare of their fellow beings will shortly be published by Mr. Murray. It is entitled 'Dangerous Trades: the Historical, Social, and Legal Aspects of Industrial Occupations as affecting Public Health,' edited by Dr. T. Oliver, M.A., M.D. In order that the information given and the views expressed may come with the weight of authority, the co-operation of experts on the numerous subjects with which the volume deals has been obtained.

As the study of Anthropology progressed it became plain that it would shortly be split up into various sections, each possessing its special workers. One of these sections is the Child, as differentiated from the fully matured adult. To this branch of the subject, Dr. Alexander Francis Chamberlain, an American physician, has devoted his attention for several years, and he is now about to publish in Mr. Walter Scott's 'Contemporary Science Series' a book dealing very fully with the topic. It will be entitled 'The Child, a Study in the Evolution of Man,' and will contain a summary of the investigations that Dr. Chamberlain has carried out.

Five stories which General Baden-Powell contributed some years ago to the Badminton Magazine are about to be published by Mr. William Heinemann. The volume will have illustrations by the author.

The works of Captain Mahan and the spirit of Imperialism are quickening the interest of the American people in naval matters. It is not, therefore, surprising that Professor Hollis, of Harvard, has written what is practically a history of the United States Navy. The title is to be 'The Constitution and the Navy under Sail.'

Among the new novels which Mr. John Murray has in preparation are 'John Charity: a Tale of the Early Part of Her Majesty's Reign,' by Horace Annesley Vachell; 'Parson Peter,' by Arthur H. Norway; 'The Worldlings,' by Leonard Merrick; 'A Gentleman,' by the Hon. Mrs. Walter Forbes; and a story, founded on fact, being an episode in the life of the famous Lord Cochrane, by A. Lee Knight, entitled 'A Sea King's Midshipman.'

Mr. Murray will also shortly publish a new novel, 'A Vizier's Daughter,' from the pen of Lillias Hamilton, M.D. The author's name is well known to the public. As the Amir's medical adviser she has had opportunities of studying the inner life of the Court and people of Afghanistan such as probably no other European, certainly no other European lady, has enjoyed. As she herself says in the preface, she writes of what she saw and heard, and of persons whom she 'knew as intimately as one can ever know a people so far removed from us in thought and education.'

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are issuing the prospectus of a new and important work, entitled 'Britain's Austral Empire,' by George Firth Scott, with illustrations by Percy F. S. Spence. Publication, however, is conditional on the number of subscriptions received. The volume will consist of a series of drawings and portraits, reproduced by photogravure, with appropriate letterpress. Of these portraits (which, where possible, will be drawn from life), there will be forty, measuring 7 by 4½ inches, and they will comprise such well-known representatives of England and Australia as Lord Salisbury, Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain, M.P., Hon. Edmund Barton, Q.C., Hon. C. C. Kingston, Hon. Alfred Deakin, the Master of the Rolls, Sir Robert Finlay, Q.C., M.P., and Lord Selborne. The book will be printed on imperial hand-made paper at the well-known Chiswick Press, and will be enclosed in a portfolio of white vellum and cloth, ornamented with a design by Mr. Spence.

Messrs. George Newnes, Limited, are bringing out in weekly numbers a new work on China, prepared specially in connection with the present crisis. It is a pictorial and descriptive account of the causes which led up to the present trouble.

The value of letters, as shown in the latest quotations in the autograph market, is interesting, and seems to cast some light on the position which their writers hold in public estimation. Thus a mere one-page note of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, making an appointment in London, is priced at £2. 7*s*. 6*d*. Charles Lamb and Charlotte Brontë, however, are still higher in the list, and their autographs are respectively valued at twelve and nine guineas. A fairly long letter from Mrs. Browning on the subject of a new book, and how best to get it noticed in the American magazines, may be purchased for four guineas, while twenty-four shillings will make anyone possessed of an epistle from Lord Beaconsfield in acknowledgment of a laudatory notice of 'Sybil.' The value of Death in raising the price may be judged from the fact that Charles Kean fetches four guineas and Charles Matthews two, while Sir Henry Irving, who is still with us, can only command a paltry three-and-sixpence.

The Religious Tract Society have undertaken, at the request of the Publication Committee of the Ecumenical Conference of Foreign Missions, to publish the Official Report of the meetings held in New York from April 21 to May 2, 1900. A committee of literary experts have combined to produce what they trust will prove to be a standard missionary book. The leading papers and speeches will be given in full, but a large portion of the Conference proceedings has been severely edited so as to retain only what is judged to be of permanent value. The book will be published in two volumes.

The text of the edition of 'Mandeville's Travels,' which appears this month in Messrs. Macmillan's Library of English Classics, is that of the Cotton manuscript, first printed in 1725, and since unconsulted by any subsequent editor, with the exception of Mr. G. F. Warner, who used it for the notes to his Roxburghe Club edition of the rival 'Egerton' text. The Cotton version will now for the first time be printed in its entirety, as the 1725 editor omitted whole lines and sentences, and these have not hitherto been restored to the text. The 'illustrative narratives from Hakluyt,' which are printed as a supplement to the new edition, are those of Carpini, Rubruk, and Odoric. Of the last named, almost the whole was incorporated piecemeal into 'Mandeville's Travels,' so that its inclusion in the same volume makes the real nature of the compilation amusingly clear. The other July volume in the series is 'White's Selborne,' reprinted, it is believed, for the first time, from the text of the first edition without diminution or 'additional notes.'

As we mentioned some time ago, Messrs. Methuen are about to publish 'A Book of Dartmoor,' by Mr. S. Baring-Gould. This upland region is attracting annually a large number of visitors, and is strewn with relics of a prehistoric age. The scenery, the relics of antiquity, the natural history, legends and superstitions, all come in for notice in this book, which is profusely illustrated by Mr. A. B. Collier and Mr. E. A. Tozer, as well as from photographs.

Mr. Farjeon's new novel, which is to be published by Messrs. Hutchinson very shortly, is entitled 'The Mesmerist.' Farjeon gives his readers the dramatised version of the story in addition to the novel.

Mr. George M. Brown, manager of Messrs. Nelson & Sons, publishers, has been adopted as Liberal candidate for the Central Division of Edinburgh.

In view of the approach of a General Election Mr. Buxton has in preparation an appendix to his popular handbook to the political questions of the day, bringing the work up to date, and including the new subjects which are likely to be placed before the electors. It will consist of some forty to forty-eight pages, and will of course be published by Mr. John Murray.

'Alien,' the nom de plume of an Australian lady whose writings have found favour with the reading public, is publishing through Mr. Fisher Unwin a story of New Zealand life, entitled 'The Devil's Half Acre.'

The authoress of 'China: the Long-lived Empire,' to which we have already made reference, is Miss E. R. Scidmore, an American lady who, within the last fifteen years, has paid seven visits to China; and a chief attraction of her book consists in the numerous illustrations. The frontispiece is formed by a picture of the Empress Dowager as a young woman seated in her chair of state. The writer's view is that China is breaking up, but only as it has broken up a hundred times before, and will probably be still breaking up in another thousand years. The opening chapter describes the Taku Forts and the railway of which we have read so much in the last few days. Tientsin is only sketched in passing, but Peking, 'the most incredible, anomalous, and surprising place in the world,' is described, and well described, with much detail: and the description is likely before long to gain fresh point. Also Miss Scidmore devotes many of her pages to the Yangtsze Valley, 'that Far-Eastern storm-centre, with a future Fashoda somewhere in its length'—a subject to which this country can scarcely be indifferent. Messrs. Macmillan & Co. publish the work.

Miss M. M. Mallock's successful little treatise, called 'A Younger Son's Cookery Book,' has been republished by the Messrs. Macmillan under a new title, 'The Economics of Modern Cookery,' and at a reduced price.

Mr. H. M. Spielmann has been complaining in the Author in reference to his little volume on Ruskin, and the complaint has evoked an amusing retort from Mr. Andrew Lang in this month's Longman's. Mr. Spielmann's grievance is that his book was introduced to the American public by a gentleman whose good offices were not wanted, and are in fact resented. Mr. Lang's name was mentioned, in connection with his editorial introductions and notes in the Border Edition of the Waverley Novels. To the writer of the volume on Ruskin 'the question is whether an author cannot rest between his own covers without, so to say, having a strange—though, I am willing to admit, a most exemplary and distinguished—bedfellow forced upon him by the publisher, unasked.' 'Mr. Spielmann,' remarks Mr. Lang caustically, 'is right—the situation borders on the indelicate. When an author is dead (and out of copyright) he cannot help himself. Boswell could not kick out Croker, and Mr. Spielmann implies that Scott is helpless when I am forced between his covers. I am not afraid to meet Sir Walter. Apart from many old associations of countryside, kindred, and common friends, Sir Walter liked dogs, and I can offer a doglike fidelity, love, and devotion.' How Lord Byron may get on in the shadowy world with Mr. Henley and Mr. Prothero, Mr. Lang does not pretend to guess, and in the spirit of Brugglesmith he winds up by wondering if Mr. Spielmann, 'the sweet enthusiast,' has any remedy. There is an unkind remark about the Latin of writers in the Author, which, however, cannot be said to be undeserved.

'Boer Politics, an Answer to some Pro-Boer Statements, based on Facts and Documents,' by Yves Guyot, Editor of Le Siècle, Paris, appears among Mr. John Murray's announcements of forthcoming books. There is no Frenchman who has done more to stem the tide of anti-English feeling on the Continent in regard to South African affairs than the author. This work is mainly an answer to the charges and assertions of Dr. Kuyper, but it deals with the whole question in a masterly way.

Two important books by the late John Addington Symonds, 'The Life of Michael-angelo Buonarotti' and 'The Life of Benvenuto Cellini,' have been taken over by Messrs. Macmillan from the original publisher, Mr. Nimmo.

We have not for a long time read a more charming or suggestive essay in critical biography than Mr. Arthur Waugh's little book on Browning, with which Messrs. Kegan Paul & Co.'s series of Westminster Biographies opens. Mr. Waugh is already known to literary students as the author of an admirable Life of Tennyson and as a contributor on literary subjects to the reviews; but he has never done anything so good as this little work on Browning. The volume is intended for the pocket: yet within such small compass we have a portrait of the man and an appreciation of the poet which no student of Victorian literature can afford to neglect. 'Browning,' says Mr. Waugh in summing up, 'is in a very real sense the poet, not of England alone, but of the world. His attitude to men and life was never distraught by petty interests of blood or party; the one claim upon him was the claim of humanity. . . . The subtlest master of human aspiration, save only Shakespeare, that has ever dignified the English language with poetry' is the final verdict. The 'Westminster Biographies' make an auspicious start.

COPYRIGHT.

On Thursday, the 5th, the Select Committee of the House of Lords on Copyright met, Lord Monkswell presiding. Mr. T. E. Scrutton, on behalf of the Royal Academy of Arts, made further suggestions upon the clause dealing with the relative rights of the copyright owner and the possessory owner in original paintings and drawings. He said that the clause on this subject drafted by the committee practically kept the copyright in the artist, except in the case of artistic work executed on commission for valuable consideration by order of an employer, in which case the copyright was to remain in the artist; but he could not reproduce without the consent of the owner of the picture a work of art. The first difficulty the Royal Academy thought likely to arise was that in practice it would be very difficult to draw a line between the sale of a picture and the painting of a picture on commission. For instance, a gentleman came to the studio of Sir L. Alma-Tadema and said he wanted a water-colour 13 in. by 11 in., but did not care what the subject was. Would that be a work executed on commission for valuable consideration? If the same purchaser found a water-colour to suit him in the studio and bought it, Sir L. Alma-Tadema could reproduce that without his consent, while in the case put he could not. The Academy could see no reason for the distinction between the two cases. They strongly objected to the copyright in a work painted on commission going to the purchaser except in the case of portraits. Another point they wished to bring before the committee was this, that the clause as drafted did not touch the position of the art publisher, who, when he ordered an artist to execute a work on commission, of course wanted to have the copyright himself; and the Academy quite recognised that the copyright should go to him. Another point to which he desired to call attention was the question how far the clause would prevent an artist from enlarging a sketch he had made for a picture. The Academy would like to be sure that the clause would not do that, for they felt that it would be very undesirable that the reproduction of a picture should be stopped merely because it had originally appeared in a paper. The fourth matter the Academy wished to bring before the committee was whether, in the peculiar circumstances of sculpture, it was necessary at all to change the law with regard to it. For 100 years the sculptor had had the right when he executed a work on commission to make copies of it. Under the Sculpture Act, 54 Geo. III., c. 56, the person who executed the work was given the sole right of making copies, unless he transferred the right by a deed in writing signed by two witnesses, and sculptors wished to retain that right.

Lord Thring: Is that what the Academy want in regard to pictures?—Yes, except in the case of illustrations in books and portraits. The Academy would be perfectly content with a provision that the copyright should remain in the artist unless it is passed by writing.

Do I understand that the artists' proposal is that if I go to Christie's and buy a picture I should obtain no right in it except a sort of easement to hang it on my wall?—If you go to-morrow and buy a picture at Christie's, you will only get the easement to hang it on your wall. You would not get the copyright. That is the present law. The witness then proceeded to repeat that the position of the Academy was this, they would prefer that the copyright should remain in the artist unless it had been transferred in writing; but, feeling that a difficulty might arise in the case of portraits, they were willing to agree that the artist should not have the right to reproduce a portrait without the owner's consent.

Mr. T. Brock, R.A., in answer to the Chairman, said that he had been requested by the President of the Royal Academy to state the case on behalf of sculptors. He said he thought that the framers of the Act of 1814 fully recognised the exceptional difficulties attending the work of sculptors and the heavy expenses incurred in the production of their work, and therefore had allowed them to supplement their incomes by means of reproductions.

On Monday, in the House of Lords, Lord Monkswell moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee on the Copyright Bill. He said that since the second reading it had been before a Select Committee, but no serious alterations had been made in the Bill, and with one exception it was practically the same Bill as that which passed the House last year. That exception was the exemption of abridgments. Some of the scientific societies seemed to think that the publication of their reports might be affected. The committee had put in a sub-section in Clause 4 to the effect that fair extracts, whether made for the purposes of a new work, for the ordinary purposes of criticism, or in the course of reporting for public information, should not constitute an infringement of copyright. He hoped on reconsideration the scientific world would see that there was no prospect of injustice to them arising out of this measure. When this Bill was introduced the Colonial Office suggested that this Bill, being different from that of last Session, would have to be sent again to the colonies for approval. But there was no reason, he thought, for doing so. There was only one clause in the Bill which affected the colonies, and that was one which they very much desired. It was intended to remedy a grievance from which Canada had suffered for many years. As the law now stood an English edition of a copyright work might be introduced into Canada, but Canadians could not introduce their copyright works into the United Kingdom. It was proposed to put the United Kingdom in precisely the same position as the colonies and to prohibit the importation into the colonies of works copyrighted in the United Kingdom. There could be no doubt whatever that the colonies were very strongly in favour of the Bill, and there was no reason to refer it to them. A telegram from Ottawa published in the Times on July 5 stated that the Copyright Bill stood for second reading in the House of Commons, and that Mr. Fisher thought there was every reason to believe that it would become law this Session. He had since heard that it had passed the Canadian House of Commons and would certainly be passed by the Senate. The Bill, by enabling Canada to make a law for exclusive copyright, would obviate the raising of difficult questions between the colony and the mother country. He trusted the Government would give every facility for the passing of the Bill through Parliament this Session.

The House then went into Committee on the Bill, the Earl of Morley in the chair.

The amendments proposed by the Select Committee were agreed to.

Lord Burghclere said he had been asked by many eminent dramatic writers to put down amendments to Clause 5, which they feared would prejudice their interests in the performing rights of their dramatic works, but as he regarded the Bill on the whole as a very valuable measure, and should not like to injure the prospects of its passing, he would not move the amendments; but, if necessary, would have them moved in another place.

The Bill passed through Committee.

A Correspondent's View.

Sir,—I do not know whether the following suggestion is of any use in reference to the contemplated Copyright Bill, but I make it for what it is worth. I think that the product of a man's brain in regard to any literary work should be his entirely. He creates something altogether new, and he knows nothing of the manner of its reception. It may be an utter failure.

I suggest that copyright should exist for fifty years certain from the date of first publication, and that it should be perpetual thereafter, provided that the owner of the copyright publish at least every five years an edition not less in number than two-thirds of the last edition. If it did not pay him to do this it would not be done, and the copyright would, of course, lapse, but it might produce a something, and that should belong to his family or legal representatives. This would give encouragement to the production of works likely to be of permanent value.

Yours faithfully,

A READER.

THE DEMAND FOR NOVELTY IN FRENCH FICTION.

In the July Century, in a paper on 'Artistic Paris,' Richard Whiteing writes caustically of the demand for 'something new' that stimulates French authors to feverish activity.

Literature is another of the great industries, for France still does a considerable export trade in that article. Nothing is wasted. The still-born fiction of the year is regularly exported to South America as the latest rage of the boulevard. Most of its job lots are simply paradoxes that have failed. The French are always on the look-out for the new thing, and this is at once the worst danger of their literature and its alluring charm. They have their spring patterns in ideas as in muslins, and a fashion seldom outlasts the season. The literary schools are about as short-lived as the governments, and founders come and go just like ministers of state. You meet young fellows who have had their day—greybeards of failure still with raven locks. For they must be very young at the start. Paris likes them tender, since she means to eat them up. I have known a lad of parts quite put out because his 'system' was not ready for publication before he had turned eighteen. France believes in youth just because of her age. The contact warms her blood. She has believed in it more than ever since the German war. The school-boy lauds it in all the arts, and the salons discover an infant prodigy every day. It leads to some waste of effort, of course. The eccentricities of these young men in a hurry are appalling. Critical indignation is thrown away upon them, and the only corrective is the rude justice of their struggle for survival. . . .

Zola and his naturalists are greybeards in every sense, yet it seems not so very long since they went out every day to take the scalps of the sachems of more ancient lodges, and seldom returned without a trophy. They were wont to celebrate their triumphs by feasts in the wigwam of the patron, with much boiled and roast, and still more talk, in the twilight, of that literature of Gautier and his mates to which they had given the death-blow, and of the other literature which was to take its place. Of this last, 'O King, live for ever!' was to be read between the lines on every page. Well, well, where is it now? But why say more than Mr. Justice Shallow has said already—'All shall die'? And has not Béranger sung the 'old clo'' of the warriors who have had their day? The imperious necessity of the new thing drove the disciples themselves into revolt against the master, and one by one they set up rival schools, and demolished him in epigrammatic prefaces—generally the best things in their books.

REORGANISATION OF MESSRS. HARPER & BROTHERS.

As a further step in the reorganisation of Messrs. Harper & Brothers, we learn from the New York Publishers' Weekly, Justice Smyth, in the Supreme Court, on June 28 entered an order approving the report of Hamilton Odell, who was appointed referee, to compute the amount due the bondholders under the mortgage executed by Messrs. Harper & Brothers to the Morton Trust Company, formerly the State Trust Company, and directing that all the property of the firm covered by the mortgage be sold at public auction in the Real Estate Exchange at a date to be fixed by Mr. Odell. The amount of the mortgage, as fixed by the referee, is $3,466,250.

The control of the firm's property and business was voluntarily given over to the State Trust Company as Trustee for J. Pierpont Morgan & Co., holders of the mortgage bonds in question, on November 28, 1899. The terms of the mortgage gave the Trust Company the right to take possession of the property covered by it at any time, but the action was due to the initiative of the Harpers, who believed that it would best serve the interests of the creditors and the business of the firm.

George B. M. Harvey, who had been elected President of the Harper firm, was appointed the agent of the Trust Company in the management of the firm's business. The property covered by the mortgage, which was executed on Nov. 16, 1896, consists of all property of the firm except the stock then on hand, bills receivable, supplies, and cash on hand. The Reorganisation Committee of Creditors, appointed after the transfer of control to the trust company, reported in December last that the assets against the mortgage bonds gave them an actual value of about 26 per cent. of their par value.

In addition to this bonded indebtedness of the firm there was then reported other net liabilities of $1,962,612, made up of bills payable, general creditors, manuscripts, advertising, unexpired subscriptions, &c. Against this it was estimated at the time were assets equal to about 22·5 per cent. It is understood that these general creditors worked in consonance with the Trust Company in the scheme for reorganisation and continuance of the business.

The hearing before the referee occupied only one session, and was without discord. The date for the sale at auction has not yet been announced by Mr. Odell.

SALE JOTTINGS.

Last week Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge sold an exceptionally interesting collection of autograph letters and historical documents, including the following: a letter from George Monck, Duke of Albemarle, giving an account of the battle with the combined Dutch and French fleets under the commands of Van Tromp and De Ruyter—£16 (Quaritch); a letter written by Lord Nelson from the 'Victory,' January 18, 1804, addressed to General Villettes, in which he refers to his presence before Algiers—£8. 10*s*. (Brown); a letter of five pages quarto from Jane Austen, dated October 14, 1813—£10. 15*s*. (Quaritch); a letter from Maria Edgeworth, dated Edgeworth Town, April 8, 1818—£6 (Quaritch); a letter from David Garrick, dated 'Hampton, Jan. 28' [illegible]—£7. 10*s*. (Pearson); a letter from David Livingstone, dated Tetle, February 19, 1859—£5 (Pearson); a letter from William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, to Lord Fairfax, 2½ pages quarto—£13. 10*s*. (Pearson); a signature of William Penn, with seal appended to a document—£12 (Quaritch); a letter from P. B. Shelley to J. Williams, Dublin, April 1813—£9 (Brown); an autograph MS. of H. K. White, entitled 'Remarks and Translations from the Ancients,' three closely written pages quarto—£6. 10*s*. (Maggs); three letters from Mendelssohn on musical subjects, two in German and one in French—£14. 12*s*.; a bill in the autograph of Robert Burns, dated April 15, 1784—£8. 5*s*. (Pearson); a note from Thackeray to Miss Proctor—£12 (Brown); three very fine and exceedingly interesting letters from Thackeray to 'My Dear Fladgate,' and appear never to have been published. Two of the three are dated from the Clarendon Hotel, New York, 1855. One, which sold for £20. 10*s*. (Sabin), contains the following passage:—

> I know you will be glad to hear that I have done as well in December as in January, and much better as far as popularity goes. Boston being far better pleased than N.Y. with my [illegible]. I am just back from Buffalo 500 miles off. Twenty hours by railway in the snow, it would have taken three weeks to travel from place to place in the old times, in our times, and instead I thank the railways for putting these thousands of dollars in my pocket. Oh, Sir, the West is a great place! I have only just seen the portal of it, but it's wonderful. The boys must come here. Wealth grows here, its first crop pays the fee simple of a farm, send your boys out and accustom them to the shovel and the hoe, and when big enough start them for this west. For you and me the old country is the best. How I wish I was back. I hate the money grubbery, but for the young ones' sake we must continue it, and for old age when no man may work.

The second letter realised £16 (Sabin), and refers to the profits of a lecture tour:—

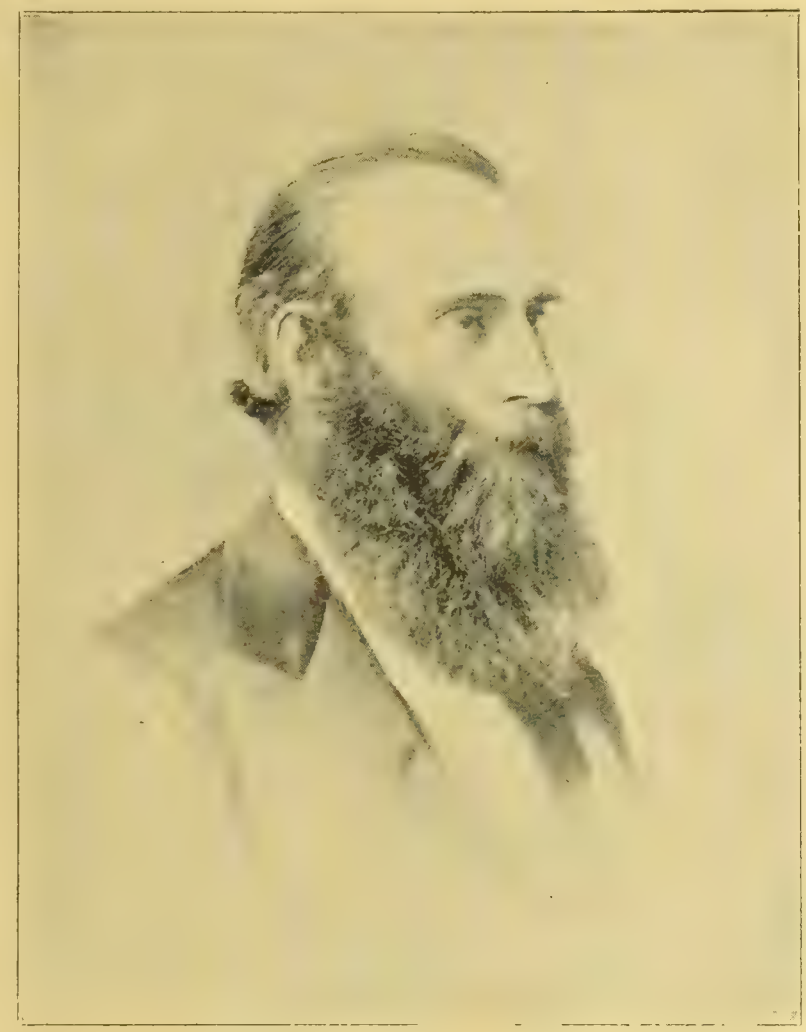
> I am sure you will be glad to hear that I am doing famously well. At first there was a doubt, almost a defeat. The people didn't know what to make of George I. and his strumpets, but they like better and better with each lecture. Last night at Brooklyn there were 2,500 persons at the lecture. Shall make a nice little pot of money here: £800 between Nov. 1 and Dec. 4.

The third letter was a brief one, containing a clever sketch in the shape of his own portrait, and realised £24 (Sabin); Royal sign manual of Elizabeth to a warrant—£11 (Pearson); a letter signed by Oliver Cromwell, in French, June 10, 1654—£11 (Barker); letter from Dr. Johnson to Thomas Cumins, dated May 25, 1774—£7. 10*s*. (Barker); letter from Charlotte Brontë to Miss Ellen Nussey, 1841—£7. 12*s*. (Quaritch); a letter, 1756, from General Wolfe, giving advice as to military training and education, referring to Admiral Byng's failure in the Mediterranean, &c.—£37. 10*s*. (Quaritch).

On Wednesday Messrs. Puttick & Simpson sold some interesting autograph letters and documents which once belonged to Garrick. They included eleven plays, with MS. emendations, notes, and additions for stages purposes, by Garrick—£30 (Pearson); the original MS. play of 'The Fairy Knight, or Oberon the Second,' 17th century, with an epitaph at the end on the 'Virtuous lady Frances Monson, deceased April 16, an '58'—£25 (Pearson); a panegyric upon Shakespeare, a contemporary MS.—£13. 10*s*. (Pearson); a collection of prologues, epilogues, short poems, and songs in MS., with alterations and additions in the autograph of David Garrick—£6. 6*s*. (Pearson); MS. diary for 1769, in the autograph of Mrs. Eva Maria Garrick—£20 (Pearson); an ode upon dedicating a building to Shakespeare, with emendations by Garrick—£21. 10*s*. (Sotheran); 'The Jubilee,' a farce, Garrick's copy, with additions and alterations in his autograph—£10. 10*s*. (Pearson); marriage certificate of David Garrick and Eva Maria Violette, with the attestation of the Portuguese chaplain, June 26, 1749—£6 (Sotheran); 11 MS. plays, with notes and emendations in the autograph of David Garrick—£10 (Pearson); four autograph letters from Mrs. Siddons to Mrs. Garrick—£11. 15*s*. (Pearson).

MR. BRET HARTE ON SHORT STORIES.

Mr. Bret Harte is the first of living short story writers, and his 'views' on the art he has done so much to popularise are particularly interesting. They are given in an article written for the 'Universal Anthology,' an American series. Until the appearance of 'The Luck of Roaring Camp' there was no distinctively American 'short story.' Rae, Hawthorne, Irving, and others had written brief tales and sketches, but they were all written after European models. Even when the gold discovery had opened a new world in California, the fiction remained English in tone and spirit. This is how Mr. Bret Harte relates his own share in the change which followed: 'With this singular experience before him, the present writer was called upon to take the editorial control of the Overland Monthly—a much more ambitious magazine venture than had yet appeared in California. The best writers had been invited to contribute to its pages. But in looking over his material in preparing for the first number, he was discouraged to find the same notable lack of characteristic fiction. There were good literary articles, sketches of foreign travel, and some essays in description of the natural resources of California—excellent from a commercial and advertising viewpoint. But he failed to discover anything of that wild and picturesque life which had impressed him, first, as a truant schoolboy, and afterwards as a youthful schoolmaster among the mining population. In this perplexity he determined to make good the deficiency himself. He wrote "The Luck of Roaring Camp." However far short it fell of his ideal and his purpose, he conscientiously believed that he had painted much that "he saw, and part of which he was," that his subject and characters were distinctly Californian, as was equally his treatment of them. But an unexpected circumstance here intervened. The publication of the story was objected to by both printer and publisher, virtually for not being in the conventional line of subject, treatment, and morals! The introduction of the abandoned outcast mother of the foundling "Luck" and the language used by the characters received a serious warning and protest. The writer was obliged to use his right as editor to save his unfortunate contribution from oblivion. When it appeared at last he saw with consternation that the printer and publisher had really voiced the local opinion; that the press of California was still strongly dominated by the old conservativism and conventionalism of the East, and that when "The Luck of Roaring Camp" was not denounced as "improper" and "corrupting" it was coldly received as being "singular" and "strange." A still more extraordinary instance of the "provincial note" was struck in the criticism of a religious paper that the story was strongly "unfavourable to immigration" and decidedly unprovocative of "the investment of foreign capital." However, its instantaneous and cordial acceptance as a new departure by the critics of the Eastern States of Europe enabled the writer to follow it with other stories of a like character. More than that, he was gratified to find a disposition on the part of his contributors to shake off their conservative trammels, and in an admirable and original sketch of a wandering circus attendant called "Centrepole Bill" he was delighted to recognise and welcome a convert. The term "imitators," often used by the critics, who, as previously stated, had claimed for the present writer the invention of this kind of literature, could not fairly apply to those who had cut loose from conventional methods and sought to honestly describe the life about them, and he can only claim to have shown them that it could be done. How well it has since been done, what charm of individual flavour and style has been brought to it by such writers as Harris, Cable, Page, Mark Twain, in "Huckleberry Finn," the author of "The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountains," and Miss Wilkins, the average reader need not be told. It would seem evident, therefore, that the secret of the American short story was the treatment of characteristic American life, with absolute knowledge of its peculiarities and sympathy with its methods; with no fastidious ignoring of its habitual expression, or the inchoate poetry that may be found even hidden in its slang; with no moral determination, except that which may be the legitimate outcome of the story itself; with no more elimination than may be necessary for the artistic conception, and never from the fear of the "fetich" of conventionalism. Of such is the American short story of to-day—the germ of American literature to come.'



THE LATE MR. ALFRED G. SUTTON

IN MEMORIAM.

Mr. Alfred G. Sutton.

We are sorry to announce the death of Mr. Alfred G. Sutton, who some years ago was well known to the trade as manager of Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.'s Export Department. He was the son of Mr. Richard Sutton, proprietor of the Nottingham Review, and was born on July 12, 1835. In 1858 he came to London, and for many years was connected with the house of Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., rising, as we have said, to be manager of their export department. In that position he was popular and successful, and when he retired some years ago he received many marks of appreciation, not only from his employers, but from members of the trade generally. Since his retirement he has occupied himself with horticulture, on which he became an authority. He also did some literary work, and was the author of a little book on 'Favourite Flowers.' His son, who had a highly successful career as a student, took a medical degree in London, but in consequence of impaired health emigrated to British Columbia some five years ago. Mr. Sutton died on the 4th inst.

PROTECTION IN FRANCE FOR THE TITLES OF PERIODICALS.

The Bulletin des Imprimeurs reports the following decision of the Paris Chamber of Commerce in a case of alleged infringement of copyright in the title of a periodical.

Owing to the failure of its publisher the periodical, La Revue pour Tous, had ceased to appear. Another publisher began the publication of a periodical with the same title a year after this discontinuance. The former publisher commenced an action at law, and the tribunal issued an injunction restraining the new publisher from using the title in question on the ground that the original publisher intended to continue the publication. In justification of this decision the Tribunal brought forward the following points of law:

The title of a periodical has the same importance in relation to the right of property as the style and title of a business firm.

The regular entry of a title in the trade register is a public legal mode of procedure, and does not affect the right of property.

The right of property in the title is only protected by publication. It only expires by non-use.

The assumption that a private right falls into universality after one year's non-use is unsupported by any statute.

Whether a private right has expired in consequence of non-use must in every case be decided according to the peculiar circumstances of the case.

NEWSVENDORS' BENEVOLENT AND PROVIDENT INSTITUTION.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—The Committee have prepared and authorised me to issue, free of charge, an illuminated Card Certificate of Membership, which may be obtained by any member of this Institution upon personal application, at Room 31, Memorial Hall Buildings, Farringdon Street, London, E.C., any Tuesday or Thursday morning between 9.30 and 12.30.

Provincial members and others unable to apply personally can have their certificates forwarded in their weekly parcels by their wholesale agents, or by post upon forwarding me 3*d.* for packing and postage.

B

In any case it will save time and confusion if each member will write to me and intimate that he desires to have his certificate,

(a) for which he will call personally in a few days, or (b) to be forwarded per care of Messrs. ——, or (c) to be posted, for which 3*d*. is enclosed.

May I ask you to notify this to the trade in your columns, and so add one more to the many favours similarly conferred upon this Institution?

I am, dear Sir,

Your faithful servant,

W. WILKIE JONES,
Secretary.

FOR BOOK COLLECTORS.

There will shortly be sold in New York a collection of books of much interest to English collectors. It was formed by the late Mr. Brayton Joes, a wealthy American lawyer, and includes of English quarto plays printed before 1700 no fewer than 520. Among these are the works of Shakespeare, Ben Jonson, Beaumont and Fletcher, John Ford, Webster, Dekker, Chapman, Davenant, Heywood, Massinger, Marlowe, Marmion, Nabbes, John Day, Rowley, Middleton, Davenport, Cowley, Shirley, Dryden, Congreve, Etherege, and Vanbrugh. Though the quartos of Shakespearean interest are not extraordinary, says the New York Times, they include the 'Raigne of King Edward the Third,' 1599; 'Sir John Oldcastle' ('W.S.' title page), 1600; 'Whole Contention,' 1619, and 'Faire Em,' 1631. Ben Jonson's 'Sejanus,' 1605, is in the library, together with that rarer item, 'Every Man out of his Humor,' 1600, and the seldom seen 'Characters of Two Royal Masques,' 1608, Bierstadt's copy of which fetched $115 in 1897.

There are eight of Chapman's productions, including 'The Blinde Beggar of Alexandria,' 1598 (the excessive rarity of which is well known), 'Al Fooles,' 1605, and 'Monsieur D'Olive,' 1606. Still's 'Gammer Gurton's Needle' is present in the edition of 1661, and among other examples of the early English drama may be mentioned 'A Warning for Faire Women,' 1599, and 'The Returne from Pernassus,' 1606. The 'Warning for Faire Women,' Daniel's copy of which brought £56 in 1864, is of superlative rarity. The early English literature portion contains a large number of rare, valuable, and interesting books. Among these are: The First, Second, and Fourth Shakespeare Folios, the 'Poems' of 1640, and the 'Lucrece' of 1624; Spenser's 'Faerie Queen,' 1590 96, 'Shepheard's Calendar,' 1597, 'Colin Clouts,' 1595, and 'Complaints,' 1591; Puttenham's 'Arte of English Poesie,' 1589; Allot's 'English Parnassus,' 1600; Chapman's 'Shadow of Night,' 1594, 'Iliads,' 1598, 'Tears of Peace,' 1609, 'Iliads' and 'Odysse,' without date; Churchyard's 'Chippes,' 1575, and 'Description of the Wofull Warres in Flanders,' 1578; Daniel's 'Civil Wars,' 1595, 'Poetical Essayes,' 1599, and 'Certain Small Works,' 1611; Drayton's 'Mortimeriados,' 1596, 'The Owle,' 1604, 'Poems,' 1608, and 'Battle of Agincourt,' 1631; Gascoigne's 'Poesies,' 1575, 'Steele Glas,' 1576, and 'Pleasantest Workes,' 1587; Greene's 'Amorous Fiammetta,' 1587, 'Quip for an Upstart Courtier,' 1592, 'Philomela,' 1615, 'Arcadia,' 1616, 'Alcida,' 1617, and 'Never Too Late,' 1621; Hooke's 'Amanda,' 1653; Heywood's 'Spider and the Flie,' 1556, and 'Woorkes,' 1562; James VI.'s 'Essayes of a Prentise,' 1585; Herrick's 'Hesperides,' 1648; Lovelace's 'Lucasta,' 1649 and 1659; Langland's 'Pierce Plowman,' Crowley, 1550; and Chaucer's 'Works,' 1542, 1561, and 1598.

English literature of later times, together with nineteenth century English first editions, forms no inconsiderable part of the library. The Kilmarnock Burns is, we understand, one of the finest of the copies known, and is accompanied by the first two American editions. We hastily note this item, and in conclusion mention the fine series of Shelley first editions, among which are 'Zastrozzi,' 'An Address to the Irish People,' 'Queen Mab,' 'Alastor,' 'Laon and Cythna,' 'The Cenci,' 'Prometheus Unbound,' and 'Adonais.' The latter is an unusually interesting copy, inasmuch as Shelley gave it to Leigh Hunt. There are also Dickens's own copy of 'David Copperfield,' Burns's copy of Shakespeare's 'Works,' 1771, Grolier's copy of 'Livy,' 1501, and volumes from the libraries of Keats, Thackeray, Jefferson, &c.

THE BRITISH COLONIES.

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Referring to the letter in your issue of 7th of Mr. D. Stewart, of Glasgow, regarding my forthcoming book on the Colonies, allow me to say that the title is, and was, 'The Making of the BRITISH Colonies,' as you will see by the enclosed notice.

I have always been anxious to do honour to the Scotch and the Irish for the eminent work they have performed for the British Isles, both at home and abroad, and would be the last to claim a monopoly of merit for the English section of these islands.

Thus, in my other book, 'The Making of Europe,' which you were good enough to notice favourably in your issue of January 13, I say, page 279, speaking of the pioneers of political economy: 'Even so certain great Englishmen, who were Scotchmen, Adam Smith and John Stuart Mill, and certain great Frenchmen, &c., have thought out the problems which affect mankind as men.'

Again, page 296, speaking of the deliverer of Lucknow, Colin Campbell, afterwards Lord Clyde, I ask, with Hibernian simplicity, 'Why are so many of the greatest Englishmen, Irishmen and Scotchmen?'

But the publishers, Scotchmen like your correspondent, struck this passage out.

In support of what I say I can show you the original manuscript, which I have in duplicate, typed and bound, just as it went into the publishers' hands.

Yours faithfully,
NEMO.

AN OLD JOKE. When Sterne's 'Tristram Shandy' was first published, the booksellers of that day, one hundred and forty years ago, with considerable indignation returned to the publisher as imperfect their copies of the volume which contained the sheet of marbled paper that was inserted to take the place of the page which Uncle Toby was supposed to have torn out in a pet. The Macmillan Company is having a similar experience with their edition of the work in the handsome 'English Classics' series. At least half-a-dozen copies have been returned with request that perfect books be substituted, and all because of the insertion of the marbled paper leaf. Several of these demands have come from dealers who ought to have known better.—New York Publishers' Weekly.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—'Our Stolen Summer: the Record of a Roundabout Tour,' by Mary Stuart Boyd, with one hundred and seventy sketches by A. S. Boyd. This is a volume that at first appeals to the reader's attention in a quiet, innocent fashion, little suggestive of the many and far distant places he is to visit in company with the author. It all seems so calm and peaceful, this setting sail from Tilbury in the good steamer Orient, that it is difficult to realise that we are soon to be out at sea in a veritable gale of wind, and shall presently be inducted into the sights of Gibraltar, Marseilles, Naples, Port Said, and Colombo, afterwards finding ourselves in Australia exploring the bush, then passing to New Zealand and driving in Maoriland, subsequently sailing down the Wanganni River, investigating Wellington, Nelson, and New Plymouth, learning the mysteries of ostrich-farming, contemplating gum-fields and a Kauri forest, and embarking at Auckland on a trip to the South Sea Islands. After this we are scarcely surprised to find ourselves among the Tongans, and after being present at a wedding feast feel that we have all the right to be called experienced travellers and have no particular desire to return home again. But this, after a visit to Samoa and Honolulu, with other places, comes about, though in a thorough roundabout fashion, for we pass across America from San Francisco to New York, and so return with an air of triumph to be welcomed by our less fortunate friends and relatives. The volume, in short, is a complete panorama, so vividly written and realistically illustrated that we seem actually to have been at the places described. It is at the disposal of all our readers to take the same round that we have done, and we are quite sure they will enjoy it.

From the same.—'The Chevalier of the Splendid Crest,' by the Right Hon. Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P., F.R.S. It is a story of brave deeds, courtly customs, and fair ladies in the reign of the greatest of the Plantagenet kings that the author has to tell in these pages, and we seem to see as we read it the glittering retinue, armoured knights, and stately nobles that constituted the main features of an English monarch's surroundings some seven hundred years ago. Sir Herbert Maxwell has managed with great success to reproduce the chivalrous spirit that animated the thirteenth century, and around the love affairs of Sir Walter le Marmion and beautiful Challice de Roos he has constructed a narrative that will steadily hold the reader's attention until the happy dénouement of marriage is reached. The only objection we can raise is that he has sacrificed something of the freedom of his story to a desire for historical colouring, and that the latter has occasionally been laid on with unnecessary fulness. It is not so much the tale of a writer who has steeped himself in the historical atmosphere of the period and then fashioned a story as the writer who has first planned out a story and then imparted to it with injudicious liberality the requisite local colouring. But this is a matter of detailed criticism which need not disturb the ordinary reader. To him we are sure the story will seem a very good one, a little laboured, perhaps, here and there, but full of many attractive episodes and interesting by reason of its varied scenes and stirring action.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Quest of Mr. East,' by John Soane. The author of this novel has very completely weighted his work with polemical matter, and its pages are full to repletion of religious discussion. It is clever, and no doubt to a certain class of mind will be found interesting; but we are afraid that the ordinary novel-reader will think that he is being treated to a conversational theological treatise under the guise of fiction, and will resent the imposition accordingly. The search for Mr. East, who has mysteriously disappeared, is only made the occasion for introducing the chief character's religious doubts and unbeliefs, and in the course of the narrative, while prosecuting his quest, he seeks inspiration from various people, including a Roman Catholic priest, a popular preacher thinly disguised under the name of 'Dr. Platt,' a Moulvie, a humanitarian deist, a Parsee, a Confucian, and others. Ultimately, when apparently the author has disburdened his mind of its load of theological varieties, the missing man is found, but obstinately refuses to emerge from his concealment, being firmly convinced that he is doing good and useful work where he is. So the quest of Mr. East would have had no beneficial result were it not that two high souled and lofty individuals are by this means brought together, and in their union we see the prospect of much benefit to the human race.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'A History of the Baronetage,' by Francis W. Pixley, F.S.A. It would appear that no history of the baronetage has been previously written. This is strange, for the subject is really a very interesting one, and in the present heated competition for book material we should imagine that it would have suggested itself many years ago. Mr. Pixley portions out his work in six chapters. In these he respectively treats of the erection of the degree, the form of patent under which it is conferred, the early history of the baronetages of (i) England and Ireland, and (ii) Scotland and Nova Scotia, the privileges of the title, and the later history of the baronetage. An appendix contains some newspaper correspondence referring to the royal warrant, &c. The creation of baronet, as now existing, dates from the time of James I. of England and VI. of Scotland, but in reality the title was known in a spasmodic form (not being usually hereditary) long before this, for we hear of Edward III. conferring the dignity by letters patent on William de la Pole in return for a sum of money, of which his Majesty's exchequer stood greatly in need at the time. Other baronetcies were similarly created, but they all died out, and on the accession of James I. the title was practically unknown. It is from this point, therefore, that Mr. Pixley practically takes up the history of the degree. He has evidently spent considerable time and labour in the investigation of his subject, and the very fact of the ground never having been explored before has added, no doubt, to the difficulties of his task. But he has come out of the ordeal well, and we may congratulate him on having produced a very interesting and informative volume.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Some Notable Hamlets of the Present Day,' by Clement Scott. Mr. L. Arthur Greening introduces this work with an appreciation of the author, which testifies in no slight degree to one of the noteworthy features in the criticism of the present day—a terrible want of balance. Mr. Scott has done good work as a dramatic critic we willingly admit, but that he is fairly entitled to all the gushing words of unstinted adulation that Mr. Greening bestows upon him is absurd, and probably no one would be more ready to admit this than himself. Mr. Scott may well pray to be defended from so injudicious a friend as Mr. Greening. Turning to the articles we find that they embrace first-night notices of the embodiment of Hamlet as presented by Sarah Bernhardt, Henry Irving, Wilson Barrett, Beerbohm Tree, and Forbes Robertson. Those acquainted with Mr. Scott's attributes will not require to be told what are the prevailing characteristics of these criticisms—a plenitude of words gracefully arranged round a main idea, much imaginative power apt to run riot owing to the exigencies of making 'copy' at the midnight hour, but above all an almost poetic conception of character which always constituted one of the critic's chief merits. On the whole we prefer Mr. Scott's earlier criticisms to the majority of his later efforts. His tendency to 'embroidery' has become exaggerated, and a profusion of language is apt to obscure the practical value of his views. But his criticisms are invariably readable, and those in the present volume have all the distinctions of style, eloquent reasoning, and dramatic insight which we associate with his name. The volume contains portraits of the various actors, and also one of Mr. Scott.

From Messrs. Griffin & Co., Portsmouth.—'The Naval Annual, 1900,' edited by John Leyland. With each succeeding issue this valuable work seems to show an improvement, and certainly under the new editorship—a change necessitated by the absence of Lord Brassey in South Africa—there are this year no signs of any decadence. The Progress of the British Navy is treated of by Commander C. N. Robinson, R.N., and the Editor; Naval Manœuvres by Mr. J. K. Thursfield; Marine Engineering by Mr. G. R. Dunnell; Naval Brigades by Mr. David Hannay; and the Tactics of Fast Craft by Commander R. H. S. Bacon, R.N. In the second part of the volume the work of preparing the plans of ships has fallen upon Mr. F. K. Barnes, and amongst them will be found our latest battleships, including the Formidable, Canopus, and Duncan classes, as well as the more recent French cruisers, and the latest armoured Italian types. Part III., dealing with Armour and Ordnance, is in the hands of Captain Orde Browne, late R.A., while the usual statistics in Part IV. include an interesting translation of the German Navy Bill. The volume as a whole is worthy of the warmest praise, and its general production reflects great credit on the publishers.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Avenging of Ruthanna,' by Mrs. Coulson Kernahan. The plot of this story is not particularly intricate, nor are the problems of life with which it deals particularly profound, but Mrs. Kernahan has managed to weave a fairly interesting narrative from her material. Cyril Calverley, a handsome young Cambridge undergraduate, who is expected by his cousin Victoria to do 'something extraordinary,' goes to stay with comparatively poor and obscure relatives in the Black Country. Here he meets with the pretty but uneducated daughter of an iron-worker, and partly for want of something to do, partly because the natural unaffected charms of the girl appeal to his ardent fancy, makes love to her. But what is little better than amusement to Cyril means death to Ruthanna, and when he announces what is practically his desertion of her the poor little thing is overwhelmed with grief, and in her despair commits suicide. Cyril then marries Victoria, but in after years he is amply punished for his heartless treatment of Ruthanna by the gradual abstraction of his wife's affections, and her ultimate treachery with his friend. The last scene is where he returns home, full of tenderness and hope, prepared to make up the misunderstanding that has arisen between them; and he finds her in the arms of Andrew Forsyth, who is 'showering kisses on her upturned face.' Faithlessness has been rewarded by faithlessness.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Ltd.—'An Imperial Light Horseman,' by Harold Blore. Amid a succession of absorbing war incidents, which by their manifest reality and freedom from exaggeration produce a strong impression upon the reader, this story threads its attractive way to a peaceful conclusion, when the hero, restored to his wife and family at Maritzburg, happily finds that some shares he had purchased in the Dives Deeps Mines previous to the war are of great value. The book is really less of a story than a description of various phases of the South African campaign woven into narrative form. It will be found to hold the reader's attention far more strongly than any amount of fictitious incident could do, since it displays the every-day life and actual occurrences of a soldier's life in time of warfare. Incidentally, too, it throws much light on the Boer's character, his feelings towards this country, and the impressions that animate his actions. The book will afford a very pleasant, and even enlightening, evening's occupation.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'Where and How to Dine in Paris, with Notes on Paris Hotels, Waiters and their Tips, Paris Theatres, Minor Theatres, Music Halls, Racing round Paris, &c.,' by Rowland Strong. The very title of this little volume presents an alluring prospect, and by a perusal of its pages holiday makers who are about to visit the gay city can have their carnal appetites whetted, so to speak, before starting on their quest of pleasure. The author himself we suspect to be a grim philosopher, who, if the truth be told, has a partiality for the plain dinner well cooked before all the Parisian nicknacks that ever were invented. He evidently believes, too, judging from the preface, that the majority of his countrymen are of the same opinion, and only profess to like French cooking because it is the fashion. Still, if they will run after the despised article, he is quite prepared to show them the way; and so, with the sarcastic air of the man of the world, inculcating knowledge into a parcel of innocent youths, he places himself at the head of the investigating column, and points out the predominant characteristics of the hotels and restaurants they visit. It is a lively little volume, full of the most practical advice, which only an intimate knowledge of Paris life could supply; and it has this further advantage that it treats of the subject of amusement in the volatile capital not only from the point of view of the man who has unlimited cash at his disposal, but also in the interests of those who are not so comfortably provided for. Mr. Rowland Strong is evidently a gentleman who has an intimate knowledge of Parisian life in all its varied aspects.

From the same.—'Paris of the Parisians,' by John F. Macdonald. As throwing light on the varied and almost elusive characteristics of the Parisians and their life, the sketches in this volume are exceedingly interesting; and Mr. Macdonald seems, with something of the photographer's rapid skill, to have caught the reflection of the people in their most characteristic moments. At the present time, when the minds of most people are turned to the Paris Exhibition, and the intense susceptibilities of the French are for other reasons exciting wide attention, these sketches are sure of considerable popularity. It should be said, however, that they are by no means of equal value, and while some exhibit a high standard of merit others, both in subject and treatment, are decidedly below par. The volume as a whole, however, is distinctly worthy of praise, and will be found a most enjoyable companion.

From Messrs. Smith, Elder, & Co.—'Dictionary of National Biography,' edited by Sidney Lee. Vol. LXIII. Wordsworth–Zuylestein. With this volume a splendid work is brought to a conclusion. In a prefatory chapter the editor supplies some interesting statistical details regarding the construction of the Dictionary, the chief contributors who have helped to build up the edifice, and the amount of matter that each has contributed, &c. From this one may gather some idea of the vast amount of intelligence and labour expended on the work. The principal articles in the present volume are 'Wordsworth,' the poet, by Leslie Stephen; 'Sir Henry Wotton,' diplomatist and poet, by Sidney Lee; 'Sir Christopher Wren,' by Dr. F. C. Penrose; 'Henry Wriothesley, Third Earl of Southampton,' by Sidney Lee; 'William Wycherley,' the dramatist, by G. A. Aitken; 'Wycliffe,' a very long article, by the Rev. Hastings Rashdall; and 'Thomas Young,' the physician and 'founder of physiological optics,' by C. H. Lees, D.Sc. Mr. Leslie Stephen's article on Wordsworth is especially interesting, though he follows very closely the events of the poet's career, without, as a rule, comment of any kind. Among the shorter articles we may mention 'Yarrell,' by J. E. Harting, and 'Edmund Yates,' by Thomas Seccombe. Many people will no doubt think the former should have been awarded more space, and the latter less. Yates, however, as the founder of the World type of journalism and a contemporary of Dickens and Thackeray, with whom his relations were not altogether satisfactory, possessed a distinct personality, and the account of his career is interesting. He was the son, it will be remembered, of Frederick Henry Yates, the actor, whose life is concisely detailed in this volume by Joseph Knight. Though perhaps wanting in great names, the concluding volume of the 'Dictionary of National Biography' is by no means the least valuable of the series, and it displays evidence in a marked degree that the diligence of the editors has in no way relaxed as the conclusion of their labours drew near. The present volume, it should also be mentioned, contains the indexes for volumes I. to IV. not previously included with the work.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Robert Orange: being a Continuation of the History of Robert Orange, M.P., and a Sequel to "The School for Saints,"' by John Oliver Hobbes. Somehow the love affairs of the leading characters of this novel all seem to go awry. Robert Orange, happy in his marriage with the fascinating Mrs. Parflete, learns immediately after the ceremony that her husband is still alive. Lady Sara de Treverell, secretly enamoured of Orange, can never bring herself to marry anyone else, and at the close of the story retires to the seclusion of a Carmelite nunnery. Lord Reckage, attached to Lady Sara, is engaged to Agnes Carillon, from whom his sense of honour will not allow him to break off relations. Possibly the only man successful in his love attachments is the artist, David Rennes, who eventually persuades Agnes Carillon to run away with him, and so saves Reckage from an uncongenial alliance. But the story is full of good points, and the description of the motives underlying the actions of the various characters is exceedingly luminous and interesting. Like other of John Oliver Hobbes' stories, she takes us into the heart of society, and shows us with admirable insight the thoughts and emotions that agitate the world of fashion. Her claims to attention do not depend upon sensational incident, but on clever delineation of character, and the ordinary phases of life are so displayed as to be remarkably interesting. 'Robert of Orange' will do nothing to detract from the author's previous high reputation as a writer of novels, though possibly it may do nothing to increase it.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Beautiful Mrs. Leach,' by Winnifred Graham. This story would, if true, form an admirable illustration of the fact that beneath the most promising exterior an exceedingly corrupt nature may be found—in other words, that 'all that glitters is not gold.' Mrs. Leach is indeed beautiful—a perfect syren, with classic features, lovely complexion, eyes 'the colour of a summer sea,' rich red lips, golden hair, &c. She subjugates almost everyone with whom she comes in contact, the sole exception being Oliver Ashford, son of an elderly baronet upon whom the lady has fixed her attention, and he suspects her from the first. Truth to tell, there is good foundation for his dislike. In reality, she is one of a gang of thieves and adventurers, her supposed father, Mr. Morrow, being the head, and in her private life she is familiarly known as 'devil-legged Cris.' The gang have previously, with her aid, murdered her first husband, Edward Leach, and now they look to a big haul from the capture of Sir William Ashford. But their efforts are nobly met by the son, who after the death of his father (the old man being thrown from his horse) manages to connect a 'loud-speaking telephone' between the Hall and his own private bungalow, and in this way is enabled to overhear their plans and to thwart them. The story is one of considerable sensationalism, but can scarcely boast, as may be gathered from our description of the plot, of much skill in execution. The same remark applies equally well to the illustrations.

NEW EDITIONS.—'Rupert, Prince Palatine,' by Eva Scott, has been issued in a second edition by Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. The character of the Prince is drawn with sound knowledge and excellent judgment, and the author has evidently bestowed no small amount of care and labour on her subject.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

MACMILLAN & CO., LIMITED, London.

LOW'S POPULAR TWO-SHILLING SERIES

These Books by MISS ALCOTT, MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, MRS. WHITNEY, and others, are well adapted for Girls for School Prizes, &c.

Small crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s.

Like the 'Standard Books for Boys,' for the earlier issues of this series there was a very large demand. Their reception has quite justified the high encomiums passed upon them by the Press generally. Altogether this series is one of the best possible selections from the various works of the distinguished Authors. It comprises books which the SATURDAY REVIEW describes as 'perhaps THE BEST OF THEIR KIND for the present generation.'

LATEST ADDITIONS

1. THE FLOWER OF GALA WATER, and other Stories. By AMELIA E. BARR. Illustrated.
2. BERNICIA. By AMELIA E. BARR.
3. THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER: a Domestic Romance. By AMELIA E. BARR.
4. COMIC TRAGEDIES. Written by 'Jo' and 'Meg,' and Acted by the 'Little Women.' By LOUISA M. ALCOTT.
5. BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By LEW WALLACE.

Stories by Maud Jeanne Franc

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE. Uniform cloth binding, crown 8vo. 2s.

These books will have an attraction, if not a fascination, for the young, being bright pictures of domestic life and sunny hearths, in which childhood and youth are gracefully sketched in joyous innocence and nobleness. They have the merit of largely introducing modes of life novel to English readers.

1. BEATRICE MELTON'S DISCIPLINE.
2. EMILY'S CHOICE: an Australian Tale. New Edition.
3. HALL'S VINEYARD.
4. JOHN'S WIFE.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

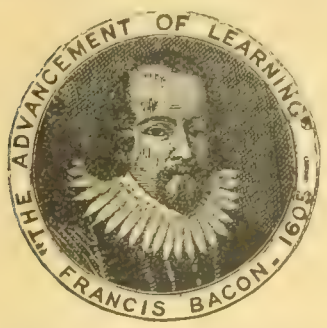
IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the



Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

For One Year, post-free to any part of Great Britain and Ireland ..	8*s.* 6*d.*
„ Six Months ditto ditto	4*s.* 6*d.*
„ Three Months ditto ditto	2*s.* 6*d.*
To America and the Continent, the Annual Subscription, including postage	11*s.* 0*d.*

July 20, 1900.

It is refreshing this stifling sultry weather to turn to the contemplation, even at second hand, of colder countries, and for this reason if for no other we welcome a second edition of Major L. A. Waddell's 'Among the Himalayas' (Archibald Constable & Co.). The author, it will be remembered, got nearer to Mount Everest than any other European, with the exception of Hooker; and the account of his experiences, coupled with the many admirable illustrations depicting the scenery and people, renders the book not only interesting to the traveller, but of value to the anthropologist, the geographer, and all who would know something of the peculiarities and attributes of obscure Eastern tribes. Throughout his narrative Major Waddell carefully makes a point of noticing the characteristics, mental and physical, of all the native races with which he comes in contact: the Tibetans, Nepalese, Lepchas, Bhotiyas, Limboos, and so forth; and the result is a book of distinct interest to others besides the adventurous climber and the lover of hazardous exploration. Of excitement, however, there is enough and to spare in the volume, and the reader who can peruse unmoved the author's description of the transit of the party by means of a rickety cane bridge across a yawning chasm some three hundred feet wide, along which a foaming, seething, mountain torrent ran, must be phlegmatic indeed. These cane bridges, it may be explained, are formed by two suspended ropes of cane thrown across the gorge, the ends being lashed to rocks and trunks of trees on each side; and between these two parallel ropes, and tied from the one rope to the other at intervals of a yard or so, are suspended bits of cane, forming V-shaped slings; while in the narrow angle of these V-slings is laid a line of bamboos, end to end, on which you have to find your footing. The bridge had to be negotiated or the terrors of fever incurred, and negotiated it eventually was, only a few of the coolies refusing to face the danger and bolting off. But it was an experience that none of the party are ever likely to forget.

These coolies or baggage carriers formed the greater proportion of Major Waddell's following when he started from Darjeeling at the foot of the mountains. All told, the expedition consisted of fifty-three persons. The author's chief attendant was a Lepcha named Achoom, a perfect treasure of a servant, and full of wonderful resource in the many makeshifts of camp life. There were also one or two Indians—who were profoundly anxious to return to their own fever-laden, rice-loving country. The chief guide and head of the transport and coolies was Kintoop, 'The Almighty One,' who apparently had no knowledge of fear, and had in his time performed some wonderful feats of daring when engaged by the Indian Survey in Tibet, Bhotan, and Nepal. His qualifications for this form of work attracted the attention of Captain Harman, R.E., and he was again sent to Tibet to solve one of the great geographical problems of the day—viz., whether the mighty river Tsang-Po of Central Tibet is continuous or not with the Brahmaputra or Dihong River which pierces the Eastern Himalayas at the plains of Assam; and though, after many hairbreadth escapes and thrilling experiences, Kintoop was unsuccessful in his object (from no fault of his own but simply mischance), he yet brought back particulars of the Lower Tsang-Po for nearly a hundred miles further than any previous explorer. With such a guide and formidable bodyguard Major Waddell may well have counted himself particularly fortunate.

The account of his adventures and explorations from the time of first leaving Darjeeling is, as we have remarked, exceedingly interesting, and in the work of description he is greatly aided by the illustrations, which convey a vivid impression of the localities visited. The party first crossed into native Sikhim, then wound their way up the Teesta Valley to the king's capital, and thence to the 'Threshold of the Snows.' We then follow them among the yaks and Tibetans, explore the Lachen Valley and Eastern Glaciers of Kanchen-Junga, and returning through British Bhotan to Darjeeling make a fresh start and assail the district of the Eastern Pass of the Jelep. Remaining chapters are devoted to the Nepal frontier towards Everest, the southern peaks and glaciers of the Kanchen-Junga group, and the Kang Pass for the western glaciers of Kanchen-Junga and for Jannu. Throughout, Major Waddell's powers of observation and skill in recording his impressions serve him in good stead, and are of material value in enhancing the pleasure and profit of the reader.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

As an indication of the success of the net system, the Booksellers' Association has sent a letter to the Publishers' Association expressing the hope that the number of net books may be increased. The publishers are now giving the matter their serious attention.

During the ensuing autumn Mr. John Murray will issue a popular edition, in large type, of Charles Darwin's 'Origin of Species by Means of Natural Selection.' He has also in preparation an illustrated handy book for travellers in Italy and students of art, entitled 'The Painters of Florence from the Thirteenth to the Sixteenth Centuries,' by Julia Cartwright (Mrs. Ady).

'China and the Present Crisis, with Notes on a Visit to Japan,' is the title of a new work by Mr. Joseph Walton, M.P., which will be published almost immediately by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. Mr. Walton has only recently returned from an eight months' journey in the East.

Under the title of 'Twice Captured,' Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons will publish immediately Lord Rosslyn's account of his adventures during the War in South Africa.

The first volume of the 'Annotated Translations from the Greek Dramatic Poets,' to be published by Mr. George Allen under the general editorship of Professor Warr, will be 'Æschylus (The Orestean Trilogy),' by the General Editor, with Introduction on 'The Rise of Greek Tragedy.' Other volumes in preparation are 'Euripides,' by Professor Murray, with introduction on Athenian Society; 'Sophocles,' by Professor Phillimore, with Introduction on the Greek Theatre; and 'Aristophanes,' by Professor Warr, with Introduction on Greek Comedy. Each volume will be illustrated from ancient sculptures.

We are sorry to state that the second reading of the Copyright Bill has been postponed until next session. The Bill is now in the hands of Members of Parliament.

Mr. C. J. Cutcliffe Hyne has done a patriotic thing; he has induced a dozen authors more or less popular to write a volume of short stories as a contribution to the War Fund. Each author gives a tale gratuitously; the publishers, Messrs. Methuen & Co., also resign all profit, and the booksellers may do the same if they feel patriotically disposed. The authors include Sir Walter Besant, Mr. Rudyard Kipling, Mr. F. Frankfort Moore, Mr. S. R. Crockett, and Mr. Cutcliffe Hyne himself. The stories are without exception bright, and we hope that, considering the object for which it is published, the volume will have a large sale. It should be mentioned that the book will be procurable for three months only.

The Librarian of the London Library, Mr. H. Wright, is collecting materials for a biography of Tolstoi, whom he is to visit during the coming autumn. An American critic remarks that the world is much too curious about the great Russian novelist, and that it would be better both for himself and the public if less were known of him. There is still room, however, for a good biography.

Mr. John Murray will shortly publish a third edition of the late Lord Loch's 'Personal Narrative of Occurrences during Lord Elgin's Second Embassy to China in 1860.' Lord Loch, it will be remembered (who was then Mr. Henry Brougham Loch), acted as private secretary to the British Ambassador, and the events he describes have much in common with the present disturbances in Chinese territory. Pekin and Tientsin were then as now the scenes of the battles of the Allied armies, and of native treachery and brutal treatment, the author has much that is personal to relate, seeing that he and Mr. Parkes were the only ones to escape of a number captured by the enemy, and for several weeks imprisoned under cruel conditions in the Chinese capital.

The Daily Telegraph remarks that fortune seems unwilling to favour the publishers. The Transvaal war, it says correctly, exercised a very depressing effect on the book-buying of last autumn and this spring; but the publishers consoled themselves with the reflection that they would probably make up their lost ground with the reaction in the fall of this year. Now, however, the trouble in China is causing them anxious anticipations, the more so as the number of books held over from previous seasons is now very large. Our contemporary is perhaps a little too pessimistic. Should the troubles in China be prolonged the export trade will of course suffer; but as yet the effect of the Eastern war has scarcely been felt. We are glad to say, on the authority of Mr. Thomas Brown, the London representative for Messrs. Kelly & Walsh, that orders continue to come freely from the Far East.

The late Mr. A. W. Tuer's collection of children's books realised over £600 at Messrs. Sotheby's sale this week. A first edition of 'Poetry for Children,' by Charles and Mary Lamb, brought £81, while 'Prince Dorus,' in the original wrappers, brought £42.

The Printers' Pension Corporation has received the gift of £311 from Mrs. Mary Maxwell, to found a second Pension, to be named the John Maxwell Memorial Pension.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers have ready the sixpenny edition of Mr. Hardy's 'Tess of the d'Urbervilles,' the large first edition being already sold out. The novel has been one of the most successful published during recent years, and, unlike many books on which there is a run when first published, continues in steady demand.

A new story by Edith Wharton, which Mr. John Murray is publishing, has had several titles which have been successively discarded as previous claims to each became known. In the United States the work appears as 'The Touchstone'; there being already a book of that title in circulation in this country, it was proposed to call it 'The Touch of a Vanished Hand.' To this the author, then travelling in Italy, had some objection, and instructed Mr. Murray by telegraph to adopt another title, which had also, unfortunately, been forestalled. As there was no means of communicating with the author again, Mr. Murray decided on his own responsibility to call the book 'A Gift from the Grave,' and under this title it will appear.

'A Marriage at Sea,' which Messrs. Methuen & Co. have published in their 'Novelist Series,' is written in Mr. Clark Russell's best style; and though not particularly strong in plot, the interest is more than sufficient to charm the reader from the first page to the last.

The concluding volumes (IV. to VI.) of Augustus J. C. Hare's 'The Story of my Life,' will be published by Mr. George Allen at the beginning of the autumn season. They will contain twelve portraits in photogravure and two hundred and fifty woodcuts. Each volume will consist of about five hundred pages.

Professor Chrystal's 'Introduction to Algebra,' published by Messrs. A. & C. Black, is being translated into Japanese.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall have in hand a new edition of Dickens's novels, with the original illustrations by Cruikshank, 'Phiz,' Tenniel, and others.

The American novel-reader is a person of immense curiosity and considerable perseverance. He, or more correctly she, has been greatly interested in 'Red Pottage,' but was in doubt about the origin and significance of the title. The doubt was increased by the motto, which runs, 'Feed me, I pray thee, with that same red pottage.' Messrs. Harper & Brothers, being pestered with inquiries, appealed to the author, and this is her reply: 'Miss Cholmondeley, in answer to Messrs. Harpers' inquiry, regrets to say she does not know where the motto comes from: "After the red pottage," &c. She remembers jotting it down in her notebook years ago, but when she turned to it she found to her surprise she had not added the author's name, which in nearly every other case she had been careful to do. She thinks it may be found in the sermons of the Rev. John Hamilton Thom.' We expect to hear next that there has been a run on the sermons of the Rev. John Hamilton Thom.

Of the making of journals and magazines there is no end. A large proportion of new papers die in infancy; but we are disposed to prophesy a hale old age for the Traveller, of which Messrs. George Newnes have just issued the first number. It is, as the name indicates, a magazine of travel. There are short articles describing tours and holidays in many quarters of the world, accompanied by illustrations of unusual excellence and interest. The only criticism we have to pass is that the papers seem to us in some instances too scrappy. All the same the Traveller makes a most promising start.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have in the press a book on 'Model and Blackboard Drawing,' by Mr. F. F. Lydon, designed to cover the new requirements of the Board of Education in both the subjects of which it treats. The book consists of 44 plates, which divide themselves into three classes, dealing respectively with the geometric models proper, common objects based on them, and blackboard exercises, treated boldly, and reproduced white on black. There are fifty-two pages of descriptive letterpress, in which the usual difficulties of the student are fully dealt with.

Mr. Robert Grant's new book, 'Unleavened Bread,' has had an extensive sale both here and in America, and a dramatised version of the story is promised at an early date. The title of the story has nothing to do with the well-known Biblical phrase, but is merely meant to suggest a half-baked product—not the book, but the heroine.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish 'Pictures of the Old French Court,' by Catherine A. Bearne, author of 'The Lives and Times of the Early Valois Queens.' Mr. Unwin will also issue next week a new volume in his 'Builders of Greater Britain,' entitled 'Sir Stamford Raffles,' which deals with England in the Far East, and is consequently published at an opportune moment. For next week Mr. Unwin likewise promises 'A Review of Irish History in Relation to the Social Development of Ireland,' by J. P. Gannon, which aims at explaining historically some of the difficulties suggested by the present state of Ireland.

In view of Sir George Goldie's assertion that the missions are undoubtedly the main cause of the present troubles in China, it is interesting to note that Mr. Henry Norman holds very strong views on the subject, which coincide with those of Sir George Goldie. In his book, 'The Far East,' referring to this question Mr. Norman says: 'I believe it to be strictly within the limits of truth to say that foreign missionary effort in China has been productive of far more evil than good. Instead of serving as a link between Chinese and foreigners, the missionaries have formed a growing obstacle. As travellers in the East well know, Oriental peoples are especially susceptible upon two points, of which their religion is the chief. We have forced the inculcation of an alien and a detested creed upon the Chinese, literally at the point of the bayonet. Mr. Norman's picture of the Chinaman's ignorance and cruelty is not a pleasant one. The interests of the various Powers and their aims, which this book deals with exhaustively, make it interesting in view of the complications which may possibly arise out of the situation between the European Powers.

Among Mr. John Murray's forthcoming publications is 'The Birds of Siberia,' by the late Henry Seebohm, with the author's latest corrections, edited by F. H. H. Guillemard. Mr. Seebohm's two volumes, 'Siberia in Europe' and 'Siberia in Asia,' have been out of print for several years. It was the author's intention to amalgamate the two into one, omitting the more ephemeral portions and so forming one book, giving the result of his ornithological travels and researches in the North. He had made considerable progress with the work at the time of his death, and it has now been completed by Dr. Guillemard, the author of the 'Cruise of the "Marchesa"' There are numerous illustrations.

Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish next week Part III. of 'Pictures of the Paris Salon of 1900,' together with the descriptive letterpress.

Last week's Spectator had an exceptionally able and interesting article on literary judgment, the text being Mr. Worsfold's admirable little book, 'Judgments in Literature,' which is published by Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. Referring to the palmy days of the Edinburgh and the Quarterly, the Spectator asks, who would care to go down to posterity with Jeffreys or Gifford's reputation as judges of the Lake School? Yet Carlyle praised Jeffrey and Byron swore by Gifford. The vagaries of criticism are endless: and the limitations of the critic often painfully marked. Byron ridiculed Wordsworth and preferred Pope to Shakespeare, Macaulay failed to appreciate Carlyle, and Carlyle was sarcastic at the expense of Macaulay. A cheerful irresponsibility characterises much of the criticism of to-day, but we are not going to raise a hornets' nest by mentioning names. The Spectator, by the way, incidentally puts in a plea for the classics. 'We tremble,' it says, 'to think what will become of literary judgment, what crudities, ugliness, and trash will overflow the world, if our universities yield to the vulgar demand to place the "utilities" first and the "humanities" second in the scheme of culture.' Have not Renan and Arnold both prophesied the triumph of the utilities? The Spectator may already begin to tremble.

Messrs. Sisson & Parker draw our attention to a statement made by a firm of north country booksellers that they supply new prize books by the best authors at less than half the usual price. We certainly do not see how this can be done, unless the catalogue is a mixed list of odd stuff.

Several 'war maps' of China have reached us. That issued with the Daily Mail by Messrs. George Philip & Son is a good, serviceable map, which has the advantage of being printed on a fairly large scale, with clear lettering and excellent colouring. Messrs. G. W. Bacon & Co.'s 'New Large Print Map of China' is of similar size, but possesses the further recommendation of several smaller and more detailed maps of different localities thrust into such corners of the original plan as can be advantageously used for this purpose. A third map, or collection of maps, on a smaller scale, but distinctly printed, is issued by Messrs. George Newnes, Limited. It is called 'The Strand' War Map of China. With all these aids to geographical knowledge, readers, even when far advanced from their schooldays, should be able to follow the course of events in the Celestial Empire with comparative ease.

FREE LIBRARIES AND THE TRADE.

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Sir,—The question has been asked over and over again, Where or how do the Free Libraries affect the booksellers? I say, emphatically, most disastrously. Fifty years ago the population of this city was less than one-third of what it is to-day, and yet there were more booksellers in the city then than now, and several of them with much larger stocks than any now held in the city. I could mention fifty people whose incomes vary from £750 to £2,000 a year who scarcely ever spend a shilling on a book, and who seem to be well up in current literature. When asked about it, they say, 'We get all our books from the Free Library.' For years past booksellers have had to depend upon the sale of novels, but now that is stopped. The sixpenny novel has effectually supplanted the six-shilling, as the six-shilling did the 3 vols., and now, forsooth, booksellers have to lend their new novels out at 3*d.* a-piece. Soon they will be 2 for 1½*d.*

Then, again, some of the publishers supply direct. Not long ago the head of one of the largest houses in England told me that School Boards and Free Libraries ought to be placed on the same level as the trade. All I can say is, where do the trade come in?

Then, again, all the leading newspapers are taking the matter up, and you can buy from the Daily News office the whole of the Crown Edition of Dickens, published at 5*s.* a vol., for less than 2*s.* a vol.

Yours obediently,

Leeds: July 13, 1900. Joseph Dodgson.

FOR CYCLISTS.

Among the very best works prepared for the cyclist are the various Road Books and Maps issued by Messrs. Gall & Inglis. We have on more than one occasion praised this firm's Contour Road Books. The present writer has tested them practically in various parts of the country, and has always found them marvels of accuracy. To say that is to say that he would not now start upon any cycling tour without the essential contour book in his pocket. Messrs. Gall & Inglis have lately added to their series a handy little volume dealing with the West of England, and it is not too much to aver that any cyclist going to the west will find it indispensable. The gradients are given on all the main roads and on most of the cross country roads, and there are explanations as to the condition of surface and other matters of importance to the cyclist. 'The Contour Road Book of Scotland,' planned on the same system, is a model of condensed and accurate information. With this handy book in his pocket the rider may go from Maidenkirk to John o' Groat's fully informed of the state of the roads ahead, the objects of interest by the way, and the best hotels at which to put up. The care and time bestowed upon the work may be judged when we say that the volume contains no fewer than 500 diagrams and maps. Mr. Harry R. G. Inglis, who is responsible for it, has accomplished a difficult task in a manner which will win him the gratitude of the multitude of cyclists who every year tour through Scotland. Besides the matter in the body of the work, the volume gives a great deal of miscellaneous information about hotel and railway rates, scenery, ferries, distances by rail, lamp-lighting tables, steamships, suggested tours, antiquities, lochs, and so forth. The series of 'Contour Road Books' is, in fact, an ideal work ideally executed, and should be in the possession of every cyclist who goes ten miles from home. Messrs. Gall & Inglis publish a series of cycling maps which is equally admirable in its way.

THE TRADE OF WRITING.

Dogberry has put it on lasting record that 'to be well favoured is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.' There is still an idea that writing, at any rate in the sense of authorship, comes by nature, and that therefore it is idle to take trouble in mastering such trivialities as grammar and style. A contributor to an American journal remarks that the complaints of inexperienced writers whose work is rejected by editors and publishers indicate pretty plainly that writing is often attempted by persons who have made no preparation for it as a calling. It is not, of course, true, adds the contributor, that no one can write in a pleasing manner without approaching the task as a professional. Many a person has laboured through most of a lifetime to acquire a correct and elegant habit of speech, and such a one is sure to write at least fluently and gracefully, if not with those touches of fancy which differentiate the work of a literary person from a mere writer. The so-called 'literary quality' consists almost wholly in the combination of fancy with a love for phrasemaking.

But it is sensibly pointed out that before one can make use of the literary tendencies that may inhere in his mind he must learn the trade of writing. For writing is a trade, in a certain sense, and it must be learned as other trades are. This is a serious and solemn truth which the great mass of young aspirants for literary distinction forget. It is conceded without any argument at all that a young person who has a talent for painting must study the art. It is never denied that a child with a gift for music must learn the technic of the instrument on which he desires to play. It is not denied even that an actor must learn something about the business of the stage before he can hope to go before the public. But it is fondly supposed that a person who has in his mind a pretty conceit for a story can sit down and write it to the satisfaction of the public without any previous training.

The history of literature, if it were studied, would dispel this illusion. As a matter of fact, all the authors who have risen to distinction have served a long and laborious apprenticeship to the art they practise. The transatlantic critic remarks that the poets alone have a gift of speech at the outset, and even they learn much in the course of years and practice. But, he continues, the young aspirant should not model his line of procedure on that followed by the acknowledged geniuses. Only genius can hope to imitate genius. For ordinary talent there is no royal road to literary mastership. The art of writing must be studied diligently, painfully, humbly. The use and abuse of words and phrases must be considered, not for a day, but for many years. The formation of sentences must be the thought of one's waking hours. The manufacture of a style is the labour of years. The old saying that 'style is the man' is perfectly true, but it has deluded many a youngster into the belief that all he had to do was to express himself according to the impulse of the moment, just as he would in talking, and that thus he would be a writer.

Style, of course, is the reflex of the mature mind, the embodiment of thought which no longer stumbles, but walks with sure feet. Let those who are wondering why their effusions do not burst into print at once stop and consider whether they really have anything particular to say and then whether they have any particular way of saying it. There are more persons with something to say (perhaps not something immortal, but still worth saying), than there are with a genuine mastery of literary expression. The latter does not come by nature; neither does it come with experience. It comes only by practice, and not an easy practice at that. It was that most literary of all recent writers, Robert Louis Stevenson, who said that the man not willing to spend a whole afternoon in search of the right word to express an idea was unfit for the business of literature. If literary aspirants would but take these hints they would themselves be saved much disappointment, and publishers and editors a great deal of fruitless labour.

TRADE CHANGE.

Messrs. Slatter & Rose, 2 and 3 High Street, Oxford, have just removed their business from the above address (where it has been carried on for 114 years) to modern and specially adapted premises at 'Mitre House,' 16 High Street, Oxford.

OUR WAR CORRESPONDENTS.

In the current issue of Harper's Magazine Mr. Fred A. McKenzie gives some interesting particulars of the careers of several of the war correspondents now in South Africa. There are sketches of Mr. Melton Prior, of the Illustrated London News, an old comrade of Archibald Forbes's, Mr. H. H. S. Pearse, of the Daily News, Mr. E. F. Knight and Mr. Winston Churchill, of the Morning Post, Mr. R. H. Davis, Mr. Julian Ralph, and many more.

'Mr. Davis,' we are told, 'like Mr. Pearse of the Daily News, is a giant. Mr. Pearse stands six feet four in his stockings; Mr. Davis is broad enough across the shoulders for a champion athlete. Of a different type is Mr. H. W. Nevison, of the Daily Chronicle. Mr. Nevison learned his first military lessons in Whitechapel, teaching the lads of the street to drill in order to promote discipline and self-control amongst them. Mr. Nevison has never reaped all the popularity his literary power deserves.'

The best of the sketches is that of the late Mr. G. W. Steevens, which is really a condensed biography. 'Mr. Steevens,' says Mr. McKenzie, 'brought to his work the highest culture of the schools, and a literary gift that had, when he was still in his twenties, placed him amongst the most popular writers of the age. A fellow of Balliol, he made his first mark in newspaper work on the Pall Mall Gazette, when Mr. H. J. C. Cust was editor. The Pall Mall was, in those days, the marvel of English journalism. Its former editor, Mr. E. T. Cook, had left it rather than renounce his political opinions, and the proprietor surprised the world by putting a young and inexperienced member of Parliament in charge. Everyone expected that ruin would result. Instead, the Pall Mall became a paper such as London had not before seen. Full of exuberant vitality, impudent, clever, with an undercurrent of scholarship, it gave the world a fresh shock every day. Among the brilliant band of young men around the editor, Mr. Steevens was easily first. But the outside public did not know him until he joined the Daily Mail. He began his work for it in the summer of 1896 by a journey to America, and tour followed tour in endless succession. His wonderful picturesqueness, his clear vision, his power of grasping details and of making the strangest scene live before every reader, soon brought fame. Whether writing at leisure in London, or in the equatorial desert after a hard-fought fight against savages, he ever displayed the same power.

'At the height of his fame he was but a boy. Married and settled, with a farm in Surrey, chambers in Bloomsbury, and a roving commission to cover the world, his life was sped at express rates. In the four years of his life on the Mail he lived more than most men do in forty. He meant to settle down, but craved one more outing before fixing himself in London. So off he went to Cape Town, and began writing home what his friends hoped would be the crowning series of his adventures—'From Cape Town to Pretoria.' But for him there was to be no Pretoria. Shut up in Ladysmith, typhoid seized him. In the days of convalescence heart-weakness revealed itself, and all was over.'

The cost of war correspondence is enormous. The correspondent's salary and expenses are a big item, and the cost of cables is bigger still. One newspaper, Mr. McKenzie remarks, paid during a quiet month in the present South African campaign £3,000 for telegrams alone. But the telegraphic despatches have recently been comparatively short. We fancy the record in cost was established when Mr. Archibald Forbes cabled his long columns to the Daily News. Since then, however, the competition among newspapers has so reduced profits that long cable despatches are becoming rare. It is understood that the big daily papers are now as 'sick' of the present war as is the great body of the public.

CHANGES OF TASTE AMONG THE READERS OF NOVELS.

One of the 'Topics of the Time' discussed editorially in the July Century is 'Changes of Taste in Fiction':—

The story of action, or romantic novel, appears for the time (so far as America is concerned) to be in complete possession of the popular field of fiction. After sporadic advances, over a considerable space of time, it has finally carried the citadel of public fancy with a rush. It has come into its own without any battle of the schools such as we are told followed the youthful challenges of Hugo and Dumas père some seventy years ago. But the latter were more truly prophets, and therefore more worthy of being distrusted in their own country. And, indeed, the authority which they wrested from the reading world is virtually the royal grant on which the present band of conquering romancers have come into power.

It is a little singular, however, that these new story-tellers have gained the front rank in the lists of popular reading without some opposition from the sturdy band of realists and humourists who were on the ground. They have not even suffered harassment from the critics, who have been wont, if not to defend the established order of things, at least to picket the debatable ground against wholesale invasion. The reason for all this peace may be found, perhaps, in the confusion of styles and qualities which has prevailed in the realm of fiction for at least a decade, and also in the fact that during the same period the occasional brilliant foray of an historical novel has accustomed the critical world to the romantic standard.

It has made for peace, also, that these dashing romancers, who are so bloodthirsty in the sphere of their imaginations, are so unostentatious as men and women on the common plane of bread and butter. They harry nobody's sportive ewe lamb; they seek to gore nobody's plow-ox. They will not even pose as geniuses. While their books are selling by hundreds of thousands, they look innocent of having done anything; they accept lionising, if at all, in a spirit of helpless martyrdom, and preferably go quietly about the disbursement of their profits in the ways that promote their personal comfort and private dignity. They are as unlike the children of romance as the most sensible and commonplace of mortals. Truly, they have the art, in every sense, of being artless.

It may be suspected that the juvenile air and vigour of the novel of action has had a mollifying effect on the introspective and analytical realists, who by their silence seem to say: 'These [illegible] are not of our family; it is not for us to suppress them: let them romp without hindrance, that the ruthless hand of ennui may the sooner fall upon them.'

There can be no doubt that in the long run the romancers have the greatest success with the most people, as the continued vogue of Walter Scott and the elder Dumas amply proves, a vogue which the lasting merit of those writers as amply justifies. The mass of the readers of the world are opportunists; they read for the hour, and take what the hour affords; they prefer an objective story in which men and women have rapid and exciting experiences: if stories in the preferred romantic mould come from the press faster than they can be generally read (as has, perhaps, recently happened), they are prone to catch up with the press by ignoring, maybe, the greatest success of its kind in order to feast on the novel of the hour. When a writer who is prospecting for a new field produces a novel of great and commanding merit, yet of a different character, his book is taken up with more or less avidity by the mass of novel-readers, other writers follow in a similar vein, and a new taste seems to obtain. The great novels of the world, no matter the school to which they may be referred, satisfy a universal taste, and survive to nourish the minds of new generations.

DEPRESSION IN THE BOOK TRADE IN 1828.

Copy of an advertisement in the Standard of June 16, 1828:

REDUCTION IN LITERARY PROPERTY.

DOWDING'S CHEAP LIST, just published, furnishes a striking proof of the great reduction in the prices of Books, arising from the depression of Trade. On the failure of the eminent house of Hurst, Robinson, and Co. he made some extensive purchases, consisting of all the unsold copies (technically called 'REMAINDERS') of valuable Books published by them. These purchases were accomplished, under the unfortunate circumstances, upon such terms as to enable him to offer the various Works to the public at prices that immediately attracted attention, and secured a rapid sale. Thus encouraged, he has from that period made this description of property his particular study, and at subsequent sales of important stocks (whether under bankruptcies, or on the death of the original proprietors) he has embraced every opportunity of purchasing, with the advantage of judgment improved by extensive experience, upon equally favourable terms. By such means he has accumulated a considerable stock of the best selected remainders (thus becoming the sole proprietor of the respective Works), all of which are included, with critical, descriptive, and explanatory notes, in his CHEAP LIST, published periodically, with the addition of new purchases, and printed on a large folio sheet, adapted for sending gratis, by the post, to any part of the empire, on application by letter (post paid) at No. 82 Newgate Street, London. The average charges in this List are about ONE-THIRD OF THE ORIGINAL PUBLICATION PRICES, a fact that requires no comment to recommend it to the attention of the public.—DOWDING'S SUPPLEMENT to his GENERAL CATALOGUE OF SECOND-HAND BOOKS, of which he has a very extensive and valuable collection, in every department of Literature, is also just published.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—Vol. VI. of 'The New Penny Magazine' contains a great variety of excellent reading, judiciously selected, and embellished with a large number of illustrations. Almost every subject of general interest is treated in its pages, and as a popular magazine we know of none that can compete with it.

From Mr. H. J. Cook, 21 Golden Square, W.—'The Giddy Ox: the Story of a Family Holiday,' by Harvey Preen. Illustrations by Carl Thrift, and from photographs by Madeleine Thrift and the author. The experiences of a family party during their holiday jaunt are almost certain to possess some features of comicality, but more often than not the humour is of a kind likely to be better appreciated by the actual participators in the events than others. So it is with this volume; no doubt the situations were excruciatingly funny to the narrator, but to the reader we are afraid their humour will appear forced and not unfrequently trivial. The illustrations, however, are deserving of high praise, and it is upon this feature that the success of the volume will chiefly depend. The general production of the work, too, is excellent.

From Messrs. Dean & Son.—'The Paper Makers' Directory of All Nations, 1900.' A large and valuable amount of information relative to the paper-making trade is given in this volume, and the long list of addresses should in itself be found most useful. In its ninth edition the work shows some improvement by way of rearrangement over previous issues, and throughout the skill of an experienced editor is observable. It is a pity, however, that the book should be disfigured by the insertion of advertisements along the margins of the pages.

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Greek Drama,' by Lionel D. Barnet, M.A. It is very generally admitted by those most competent to form an opinion on the subject that the modern drama in point of structure follows the broad lines of Greek tragedy. The five acts of the former have been aptly compared to the curve of a parabola, while the two main parts of which, according to Aristotle, every tragedy consists—development and solution—together with the turn of fortune as connecting link, have been as fittingly represented in graphic form by the curve of an ellipse. Greek drama had its origin in the rustic ballad dance performed in honour of Dionysos. To the frenzied dithyramb was added the speech of jest or recitation; 'and the combination of these gave birth to the drama.' In little more than a hundred pages Mr. Barnet manages to give a wonderfully clear account of the Greek drama. He traces the history of its development from its earliest days and rudest forms till in the hands of Aischylos and Euripides and Sophokles it became 'the voice of all that was highest and noblest in Hellas.' Limits of space forbid the inclusion of controversial matter, and it would be as hypercritical to object to the author's views on the ground of being too dogmatically put forward as it would be arbitrary to deny him the right of independent selection in dealing with hypotheses. While the whole book is of importance to the student of literature, the general reader, who resembles Shakespeare in so far at least as attainment in Latin and Greek is concerned, will find particularly interesting the chapters in which Mr. Barnet describes the chief works of the great dramatists. For our own literature teems with references to the literature of Greece; and to be able to read with intelligence one must know something of the works of Aischylos 'the thunderous,' of Sophokles 'the royal,' and of Euripides 'the human.' And no one who reads Mr. Barnet's Primer but will agree with Elizabeth Barrett Browning that 'the drinking should be ample when the drink is so divine.' Chapters on the dress of the players and stage management of the Attic theatre of the fifth century; on later Greek drama and the later theatre of Athens; an appendix on the Roman drama; a useful bibliographical note and a very full index are other praiseworthy features of this capitally written, well illustrated, and admirably produced little book.

From the same.—'The Knights of the Cross,' by Henryk Sienkiewicz. Authorised and unabridged edition from the Polish by Jeremiah Curtin. Two volumes. Full justice has been done to the novelist in this excellent edition of his work. Of the story itself we already have had occasion to speak. Though scarcely in some respects equal to 'Quo Vadis,' it frequently in the matter of strong contrasts, vivid incident, and local colouring surpasses that novel, and in the present instance it has, of course, all the advantage of being issued in an unabridged edition. Mr. Curtin's translation seems to have caught every essential quality of the story, and the publishers on their parts have given an admirable setting to the work—printing, paper, and binding being alike beyond criticism. Admirers of the Polish novelist could scarcely possess their favourite in a more suitable form.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'A Hospital Romance, and other Stories,' by Eleanor Holmes. Though unmarked by any great intensity of passion or particularly exciting incident, the contents of this volume will be found of pleasurable interest and more than ordinary constructive skill. Miss Holmes makes her points quietly, but none the less effectively, and her sympathetic intention is certain to ensure her a large number of readers.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'The Crimson Weed,' by Christopher St. John. The author of this novel, whose name as a writer of fiction is unfamiliar to us, though we have grateful remembrance of Percy B. St. John as a vivacious entertainer of our boyhood, possesses many claims to favourable notice. He has a fluent style, considerable imaginative power, and a nervous intensity that will hold the attention of his readers throughout the course of the narrative. His story is founded on man's selfishness and woman's weakness. In his more youthful years Gilbert Otway, an artist, and already possessor of a wife and family, has met a beautiful passionate Italian girl, one of the distinguished Rabucca family, and has caused her to sacrifice her good name and run away with him. Still she does not know that he is married—only that there is some obstacle to their union; and in her overpowering love for him she never thinks of questioning his statements. Subsequently he basely deserts her, and, returning to England, rejoins his wife and family. This constitutes the prologue of the story, and the after chapters deal with the desire of the bastard son to avenge his mother's treatment, and to inflict punishment on his unworthy father. It would not be difficult to point out flaws in the book, but taking it in its entirety, it is a very promising piece of work.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'Sporting Sketches: being Recollections and Reflections on a variety of subjects connected with Sport, Horses, and Horsemen, never before published,' by Nat Gould. Though it may be objected that these sketches are somewhat scrappy in character, their varied nature and the knowledge possessed by the author in all matters of sport render them very interesting. The true sportsman after all does not thirst for great originality in his reading. All that he requires is a suggestion, a glimpse of the past, that will set his recollection working, and after that he is quite happy in even meagre descriptions of the scenes he loves so well. Mr. Gould in his volume discourses very pleasantly not only of racing and its surroundings, but of fishing, shooting, and other forms of sport. He has also something to say on a subject that is now exciting great attention, that of war horses. Several illustrations are included in his work.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'The "Overland" to China,' by Archibald R. Colquhoun. Illustrated. The present complications in the East give special interest and importance to this admirably written work. Mr. Colquhoun starts with a general account of Siberia, which is full of novel information. Then he describes the Great Trans-Siberian-Manchurian Railway, a wonderful enterprise the value of which we fully realise from Mr. Colquhoun's pages. Following this come several chapters on Peking, which will be read all over Europe and America with painful interest. Of the many memorable sights of China, says the author, 'quaint, charming, or revolting, that which leaves the deepest impression is, in the writer's opinion, one's first view of Peking. . . . . Peking alone stands incomparable and apart, typifying what is, when we come to think of it, the most astounding piece of antiquity that yet survives—the Chinese Empire.' In view of what is now taking place in China, the description of the social life in Peking, and the feeling towards foreigners will be read with gloomy forebodings. At the best of times the rowdy element in Peking, as Mr. Colquhoun shows, is not friendly towards the 'foreign devils,' and it is evident that for a long time the spirit of hostility has been at work. We see the result in the Boxer outbreak, which is now causing grief all over the civilised world. Mr. Colquhoun's chapters on Peking enable us to understand the causes which have led to the present deplorable rebellion. Equally excellent are the chapters on Manchuria, excellent that is to say in the light they shed on the Chinese attitude towards Western nations, and the problems which have risen so suddenly to confront statesmen. The same praise may be bestowed on the chapters dealing with Eastern Mongolia, the Yangtsze Valley, and South West China. It is not in the least necessary to examine Mr. Colquhoun's opinions and statements in detail, because the book is sure to be widely read at present. But we may say that whatever success comes to it will be thoroughly deserved. The author has before now shown himself a man of judgment and insight, and it is curious to find how later events confirm many of his verdicts. Whoever wishes to understand the difficult Chinese problem will read 'The "Overland" to China,' and will have a clearer mind for the reading. The book is handsomely illustrated.

From the same.—'The Unknown' ('L'Inconnu'), by Camille Flammarion. The author is evidently an ardent student of his subject. This is revealed on almost every page. In his preface he excitedly and somewhat volubly explains how necessary it is in discussing the question of the occult sciences to disabuse the mind of every form of prejudice—to treat the matter from a purely scientific standpoint. It is in the manner of the conjurer who directs you carefully to watch his hands before proceeding to the manipulation of a trick. He then devotes two chapters to a consideration respectively of the two extremes of the mind (in this respect) incredulity and credulity. Having thus cleared the ground for action, M. Flammarion next boldly attacks his subject proper, and soon we find ourselves in a complete atmosphere of telepathic communications, apparitions, hallucinations, and general manifestations of the unseen and dying. Human nature is in its very essence superstitious, and we confess to having read with great interest the author's account of the psychic action of one mind upon another, the transmission of thought, the infinite variety of dreams, the features of cerebral physiology, and the nature of premonitory dreams and divination of the future. Then we nervously glanced round our chamber, and expected the spirits revealing the book of fate to appear. A creak in the furniture caused us to start, and the sound of a cat in the far distance as he serenaded his mate seemed like the moan of a human being in distress. All who can find pleasure in having their mental faculties thus mysteriously thrilled will enjoy this volume exceedingly. It contains a mass of evidence in favour of supernatural surroundings that it would seem difficult to controvert. To use the words of the author with which he concludes: 'This collection of psychic facts shows us that we live in the midst of an invincible world, in which forces are at work of which we know very little, and this agrees with what we know about the limitation of our earthly senses, and the phenomena of nature.'

From Mr. John Long.—'Ada Vernham, Actress,' by Richard Marsh. It is not altogether a pleasant view of the stage and its surroundings that Mr. Marsh takes in this novel. No doubt, much of it is founded on fact, and with many of the phases of the mummers' world as exhibited in these pages several of us are tolerably familiar, but for those who take a genuine interest in the dramatic profession it is scarcely a matter for congratulation that its worst aspects should thus be insisted upon. However, now-a-days it is often thought extremely clever to see only the material or degraded side of a vocation; it augurs yourself a man of the world, and constitutes a knowledge of real life. But for those who are hampered by none of these sentiments—the hypersensitive, in short—'Ada Vaughan, Actress' will no doubt constitute very interesting reading. It is brightly, even vigorously, written, and several of the characters—we had almost said stage hands—are sketched with dexterous intuition. Here and there, too, a touch of sentiment is introduced which considerably adds to the general effect. But on the whole the tendency to make popular capital out of regrettable circumstances in the dramatic profession is too marked for the book to be considered altogether satisfactory.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Nellie's Memories,' by Rosa Nouchette Carey. This delightful little story is now issued in an abridged edition for schools. In itself it is well adapted for the purposes of education on account of its simple character and graceful unaffected style, but in the condensed form its suitability is even still more apparent. As an educational reader it should undoubtedly command a large sale.

From the same.—'The Natural History and Antiquities of Selborne, in the County of Southampton,' by Gilbert White. No more suitable work could have been added to the publishers' 'Library of English Classics' than this. In its general production it is distinguished by the commendable features that have been noticeable in previous volumes of the series, and though its size may possibly be objected to by an age which apparently is all in favour of small books, the good qualities of printing, binding, and paper are certain to be warmly appreciated. We should also add that the volume, though large, is exceedingly easy to handle.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'A Son of the State,' by W. Pett Ridge. The study which Mr. Ridge gives in this volume of a sharp, quick-witted street gamin, his powers of observation and original views of life, is after the previous method of the author, with which no doubt readers are now fairly well acquainted. Mr. Ridge has familiarised himself with the aspects of a certain section of lower London society to good purpose, and the picture that he presents of the juvenile Bobbie Lancaster and his surroundings is always entertaining and interesting, though it may be questioned whether there is quite sufficient substance in the character to make an entire story out of. The book is something after the fashion of 'Sentimental Tommy,' but the hero is a boy of very different attributes. From the time of his returning home to find that his disreputable drunken mother, familiarly known to him as 'the old gel,' has met with her death in a street accident, the coroner's inquest being in course of progress, to the moment when he emerges from his past life a hero in Her Majesty's Marine Service, the story is told with admirable insight and appreciation of humour, and few readers we imagine who once get embarked on Bobbie's career but will follow him with sympathetic interest to the finish.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'A Boy of the First Empire,' by Elbridge S. Brooks. The author has constructed an unpretentious but attractive story round the figure of the 'Little Corporal,' and as the hero is a fine healthy young fellow who, by his spirited conduct and moral rectitude, wins his way from humble beginnings to high estate, it may be taken for granted that all young people will be greatly interested in his eventful career. The book, though never actually sensational, is by no means wanting in stirring incidents, and its hold on the reader will be agreeably sustained to the finish. There are several illustrations.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'Spun Yarn: Sea Stories,' by Morgan Robertson. These are very good, and will greatly interest the reader, but should scarcely be consumed at one sitting, since there is a similarity of treatment in the different yarns that will perhaps conduce to a feeling of plenitude. Nor should those who have sensitive feelings face the ordeal of these narratives, for they are mostly founded on the cruelty practised at sea and the brutality of captains and mates; while knock-down blows, either with knuckle-duster or belaying pin, are quite profusely scattered about the pages. The stories, like the life with which they deal, are rough, but are told in a vigorous style that is peculiarly suitable to their general character. Their very grimness will fix the attention of the reader. Occasionally we come across a narrative that is free from pictures of sorely tried but mutinous sailors ill-treated and bullied by superior officers. Such a one is 'The Slumber of a Soul,' which relates how John Dorsey, a sailor, is hit on the side of the head by a falling spar, and for thirty years loses all remembrance of his past. During this time he goes about under the name of 'Jack Shiven'—corrupted from the number of the bed where he lay in hospital—and strangely enough he ships on his old vessel as cook. One day, at a very critical moment in the passage, he again meets with an accident, and this restores his mental balance, but he takes up his life again from the moment when he was first injured. This naturally gives rise to some rather curious complications, but eventually, after a most exciting adventure with a Government cutter, matters are satisfactorily cleared up. As may be imagined, the petticoat element is usually absent in these yarns; they are, indeed, quite startling enough without it. It should be added that they are manifestly of American manufacture.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'A Pink 'Un and a Pelican,' some Random Reminiscences, Sporting or Otherwise, of Arthur M. Binstead ('Pitcher') and Ernest Wells ('Sweeny'). We are not surprised that in its own community this book has attained such success as to necessitate a second reprint, distinct from the first edition published in 1898. To those who know anything of the world of sport, 'or otherwise,' it is indeed screamingly funny, and we can imagine no better enjoyment for the quiet hour following a good dinner than a perusal of these pages. In the man of mature years it will moreover inspire reminiscences of the past which will probably be as grateful to his vanity as the recollections of that most sapient of law administrators, Justice Shallow.

From Schleicher Frères, Paris.—'La Grèce antique: Entretiens sur les Origines et les Croyances,' par André Lefèvre, professeur à l'École d'Anthropologie de Paris. The task Prof. Lefèvre has set himself is no light one; but he has performed it in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. It is no less than the unravelling and analysing of those complex elements from which has issued that ideal country Greece; and, in so doing, to throw light on the origin of modern arts, beliefs, and intellectual life. For, as he truly says, Greece, either directly or by the intervention of Rome, has educated those ancient and modern nations which have guided and still guide the destinies of the world. The author begins by elucidating the question: Why do we call those people Greeks who were called and still call themselves Hellenes? He then describes the different tribes and invasions which contributed to the formation of the Greek people. He deals with primitive beliefs, pre-Hellenic mythology, and the influence of Oriental forms of worship. Then he speaks of the Homeric poems, Troy, the Achæi, the Homeric Olympus, the gods, life and death in Homeric times, and the Homeric Hades. He dilates on that humble pastoral poet Hesiod, his times, his Cosmogony and Theogony, and on the gods and heroes, Herakles, Dionysos, Demeter, and the rest; concluding with an historical summary of the expansion and decline of ancient Greece. This work, the manifest result of much conscientious labour, contains a fund of information lucidly placed before the reader and forms a volume of that useful series 'Bibliothèque des Sciences Contemporaines' by the publication of which MM. Schleicher Frères have conferred a boon on seekers after knowledge whose pecuniary resources are limited.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'The Mystery of Muncraig,' by Mr. Robert James Muir. There is very little of plot in this story of the Stewartry of Kirkcudbright. Richard Thorburn, alias Hume, and Rob Gordon, alias Brown, have been shipmates in 'The Devil's Granny,' the former as skipper of the craft with the unhallowed name, and the latter as something higher than cabin boy. Their adventures on the coast of Africa, where, according to the skipper, 'it's possible to make a fortune—quite honestly,' have been such as to make it advisable that an account of them should not leak out. Gun-running, seizing the Queen's mails, and knocking a few niggers on the head are ways of serving your country which the country, as a rule, is ungrateful enough not to see in the proper light. Hence, when the story opens with the quondam skipper as Richard Thorburn, Esquire, of Barcloy, and Rob as 'orra' man at Muncraig, it is felt by those most concerned that it is just as well not to bore their neighbours with too much of their own adventures. The interest of the novel centres upon Rob's identity. The story shows but little dramatic power, nor can it be accredited with possessing great glow of local colour. Descriptions of natural scenery are few and insignificant. On the other hand, the tale contains some good character sketches, which make capital reading almost independently of their setting. The dialogue is crisp and natural, and the dialect of the district is very well reproduced. The metaphysical and rhetorical powers of the Stewartry must be somewhat formidable: '"Ye were considering without due consideration, I maun say," said Janet, who ten years before had attended the parish school of Borgue.' The book is well written, and bears indubitable evidence of the scholarship of the author.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Caged! the Romance of a Lunatic Asylum,' by Headon Hill. We have read several of Mr. Hill's works, but we scarcely think this story does him full justice. It is exciting enough, it is true, but the material has been roughly put together, and the inherent improbability of the plot has not been sufficiently glossed over. The scenes laid in India are perhaps the best. Surgeon-Major Cathcart has received from the Rajah of Dilnapore a splendid diamond, valued at fifty thousand pounds, as a reward for having successfully treated his son during an attack of typhoid. This diamond is subsequently stolen from the Major by his hospital orderly, an old pickpocket, and the recovery of the jewel forms the basis upon which the plot is constructed. Lindsay Cathcart, a son of the doctor, goes out to India for this purpose; but the object of his visit comes to the knowledge of one of the criminal classes, 'Flash Alf,' and a race for the prize is the result. In the meantime Kate Milborne, Dr. Cathcart's ward and Lindsay's fiancée, is in a perilous position at home, owing to the persecution of one Victor Vaultrace, who ultimately manages to get her put away in a private lunatic asylum kept by his father. Here she has the most awful experiences, and is ultimately in great danger of being poisoned when she is rescued by 'Flash Alf,' who has become a reformed character since his life was saved by young Cathcart in India. The incidents, it will thus be seen, are of a somewhat melodramatic type, and of crude sensationalism there is enough and to spare. But the reader who likes his fiction served up in strong colours will probably not complain about this, and his appetite for horrors will be increased by several vivid illustrations.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

Mr. Heinemann's New Books

STEPHEN CRANE'S GREAT STORY

THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE

POPULAR EDITION. Price SIXPENCE.

With Cover in Colours. Drawn by R. CATON WOODVILLE.

BY THE HERO OF MAFEKING

AND OTHER SKETCHES

By GENERAL BADEN-POWELL. Profusely Illustrated by the Author. 1 Vol. 3s. 6d.

The SOUTH AFRICAN CONSPIRACY; or, the Aims of Afrikanderdom

By FRED W. BELL, F.S.S.

Demy 8vo. 5*s.* net.

London: WM. HEINEMANN, 21 Bedford Street, W.C.

LOW'S POPULAR TWO-SHILLING SERIES

These Books by MISS ALCOTT, MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, MRS. WHITNEY, and others, are well adapted for Girls for School Prizes, &c.

Small crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s.

Like the 'Standard Books for Boys,' for the earlier issues of this series there was a very large demand. Their reception has quite justified the high encomiums passed upon them by the Press generally. Altogether this series is one of the best possible selections from the various works of the distinguished Authors. It comprises books which the SATURDAY REVIEW describes as 'perhaps THE BEST OF THEIR KIND for the present generation.'

LATEST ADDITIONS

1. THE FLOWER OF GALA WATER, and other Stories. By AMELIA E. BARR. Illustrated.
2. BERNICIA. By AMELIA E. BARR.
3. THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER: a Domestic Romance. By AMELIA E. BARR.
4. COMIC TRAGEDIES. Written by 'Jo' and 'Meg,' and Acted by the 'Little Women.' By LOUISA M. ALCOTT.
5. BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By LEW WALLACE.

Stories by Maud Jeanne Franc

NEW AND CHEAPER ISSUE. Uniform cloth binding, crown 8vo. 2s.

These books will have an attraction, if not a fascination, for the young, being bright pictures of domestic life and sunny hearths, in which childhood and youth are gracefully sketched in joyous innocence and nobleness. They have the merit of largely introducing modes of life novel to English readers.

1. BEATRICE MELTON'S DISCIPLINE.
2. EMILY'S CHOICE: an Australian Tale. New Edition.
3. HALL'S VINEYARD.
4. JOHN'S WIFE.
5. LITTLE MERCY; FOR BETTER, FOR WORSE.
6. MINNIE'S MISSION: an Australian Tale.
7. NO LONGER A CHILD.
8. SILKEN CORDS AND IRON FETTERS: a Tale.
9. VERMONT VALE.
10. GOLDEN GIFTS.
11. TWO SIDES TO EVERY QUESTION.
12. MARIAN; or, The Light of Some One's Home.
13. INTO THE LIGHT.
14. THE MASTER OF RALSTON.

The Third Annual Issue (1900)

The Cosmopolitan Naval Annual

ALL THE WORLD'S FIGHTING SHIPS

(Illustrations of every Warship in the World)

By FRED. T. JANE

Author of 'The Imperial Russian Navy,' 'The Port Guard Ship,' &c. &c.; Inventor of the Naval War Game.

1,450 ILLUSTRATIONS

Nearly 500 New Illustrations have been added, including:—

Directly reproduced photographs replacing most of the old pen and ink drawings. Generally these are full broadside views.

Plans on a uniform scale of practically every ship in the world.

A great extension of the silhouette index, which now includes all the principal merchant liners in the world, besides every warship. By means of this index every warship in the world can be recognised and named directly she is sighted on the horizon.

Silhouettes, on scale, are also liberally used throughout the book.

Full Report of the 'Belleisle' Experiments (illustrated with diagrams of the hits).

A glossary of all technical terms and words used in the book, in English, French, German, Italian, Japanese, Russian, Spanish, and Swedish has been added. (The Russian and Japanese words are printed in their own characters and in ordinary characters also.)

As before, in addition to all these special features, the book gives more details and data than any other naval annual in the world, and supplements these with Naval Kriegspiel notations of guns and armour, whereby the comparative value of both is visible at a glance.

The price has been reduced to 12s. 6d. net. No naval library is complete without this annual, which is officially issued in many navies. This year's edition is now ready.

Low's Popular Two-Shilling Series

These Books by MISS ALCOTT, MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, MRS. WHITNEY, and others, are well adapted for Girls for School Prizes, &c.

Small crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s.

Like the 'Standard Books for Boys,' for the earlier issues of this series there was a very large demand. Their reception has quite justified the high encomiums passed upon them by the Press generally. Altogether this series is one of the best possible selections from the various works of the distinguished Authors. It comprises books which the SATURDAY REVIEW describes as 'perhaps THE BEST OF THEIR KIND for the present generation.'

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.,
July 27, 1900.

A month ago we were all talking of Africa; now we are all talking of China and the lurid drama in which the wily celestial is the protagonist. This transfer of interest gives special value and significance to the work on 'European Settlements in the Far East,' which has just been published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, & Co. The author, who prefers to remain anonymous, modestly hopes that his 'brief account of the European Settlements in the Far East will not be without interest to the political student, the merchant, and the public generally.' As a writer, he has the luck to appear at the psychological moment, that is to say what he tells is precisely what the people at present want to know. The volume covers a wide and diversified field, dealing in turn with Eastern Siberia, Japan, Corea, China, Indo-China, Siam, the Straits Settlements, Netherlands India, the Philippines, and Borneo. The account of the various countries is partly historical, partly statistical. Wherever ancient rule or custom impinges on the present the necessary explanation is given; but there are no tedious historical disquisitions, nor is the book burdened with criticism. The style is direct and vigorous, and the information compressed and easily digested.

The author, very wisely, we think, adopts what may for the sake of convenience be called the personal method. He is fond of the character sketch, and, it must be said, understands the art of giving essentials and omitting non-essentials. Of the careers of many of the prominent actors on the Eastern stage he supplies particulars which will be read with avidity and will certainly shed light on much that has hitherto been bafflingly obscure. Carlyle had a theory that the history of a nation lies in the biographies of its great men. The author of 'European Settlements in the Far East' helps his readers to understand the motives which actuate Asiatic diplomats in their dealings with the Western world and thus to grasp the logic of the tragic events now taking place in China. Where all is well done it is difficult to single out any part for special mention; but we fancy we are not wrong in saying that the sections which will appeal most to European readers are those dealing with China and Japan.

The space devoted to the Empire of the Mikado is comparatively brief, yet the information given enables the Western reader to appreciate the enormous strides made during recent years by Japan in commerce, in education, and above all in naval and military matters. Before the war with China the Japanese army had 'a peace footing strength' of 70,000 men, and a war strength of 268,000; now the peace footing is 145,000, and the war footing 520,000. Similar progress has been made in the Navy, and at present war ships are being built for Japan in Great Britain, France, Germany, and the United States, as well as in the home yards. When the Expansion Scheme extending to 1906 shall have been completed the Mikado will in fact have one of the finest navies in the world. A remarkable development is also shown in the trade of China. Since 1885 the imports and exports have practically trebled. Turning to matters of more pointed interest we find that the Imperial Chinese Army comprises a total of 850,000 men; but it is significant, and perhaps encouraging, to note the author's assurance that 'in organisation, equipment, personnel, and commissariat the army is utterly inefficient, and, with the exception of a few brigades of foreign-drilled troops, is little better than a rabble, as far as concerns opposition to European, Indian, and Japanese troops.' The descriptions of recent fighting do not confirm this view; and it is possible that like the Boers the Chinese are both better drilled and better equipped than their critics supposed. The Chinese Navy was practically annihilated by the Japanese, and consequently is not formidable to-day, though several ships have been added since the war. We pick out these items merely in illustration of the character and value of the book. It presents in a condensed form a great mass of information on the very points about which the man in the street is curious. As a work of reference 'European Settlements in the Far East' is invaluable.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Next week Mr. Fisher Unwin will publish a new edition of Professor R. R. Douglas's book on 'China,' which was written for the 'Story of the Nations' series. This history has been brought up to date by the addition of a new chapter, which deals with the present state of affairs in China and the events which produced them; also by the addition of new illustrations, one of which shows a Chinese general and his staff, while another is a portrait of Tung Fuhsiang, one of the foremost anti-foreigners in China.

Messrs. Chapman & Hall are publishing a third edition of Alexis Krausse's well-known 'China in Decay.' The demand for this has since the outbreak of the China crisis been very large, the recently published second edition being already exhausted.

Under the title of 'The Fight with France for North America,' Messrs. Archibald Constable are about to publish a short history of the struggle between France and England for supremacy in North America, which began in 1754 and ended with the capture of Montreal and the surrender of Canada to General Amherst, 1760. The author is Mr. A. G. Bradley, the biographer of General Wolfe and author of 'Old Virginia' &c. The war included the memorable battles of the Monongahela (Braddock's defeat), Fort William Henry, Ticonderoga, Louisbourg, the Plains of Abraham, and St. Foy.

Her Majesty the Queen has accepted a copy of 'For Britain's Soldiers.' The proceeds of this book, as we have already intimated, are to be given to the War Fund. A second edition has been already called for.

In his new series of novels, of which two volumes are ready, Mr. Murray pays special attention to get up. The binding is at once substantial and tasteful, the paper good, and the printing (it is done by Messrs. Constable, of Edinburgh) excellent. Mr. Murray believes that for a half-crown series of novels, well written and well produced, there is a large public, and looking to the experience of the past we think he is decidedly right. It is interesting to note that novels tend more and more towards brevity. This is partly due to the greater demand for comparatively short stories by magazine editors, and partly to the haste and impatience of readers.

Mr. W. H. Rideing, of the Youth's Companion, who has been visiting his many friends in England, is at present engaged on a novel, the first he has written for fifteen years. It is a love story with an historical background.

This is the weather for iced drinks and light reading—especially for light reading. With the thermometer hovering about 90° in the shade, solid or instructive reading is out of the question; and as much of the literature humorously called light is decidedly heavy, many novels are now out of season. The novel with a purpose is impossible under a broiling sun. In the present temperature most readers are content to deny themselves the strenuous, the moral, or the theological story, if so be they can be cool and at ease. They turn lightly to romance in paper covers. As a consequence the sixpenny book is picking up again. Many popular stories have lately appeared or are appearing in sixpenny form, and the demand has been surprisingly good. The fact is all the pleasanter considering the bad times the trade has experienced since Mr. Kruger took it into his head to fight England.

Professor Bryce's 'History of the Hudson's Bay Company' is receiving much attention from the American press, the reviews in most cases being both long and eulogistic. One of the more important papers in New York says the author is ideally equipped for his task. He has dwelt for a whole generation in North-Western Canada, knows the country and the people from personal observation, and is an accomplished man of letters to boot. The result is a book of extraordinary interest alike to English and American readers. As most of our readers know, the work is published in this country by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.

It is announced that Mr. Clement Scott is preparing a new weekly society paper, which will appear in September.

A third edition of Mr. de V. Payen-Payne's 'French Idioms and Proverbs' is shortly to be published by Mr. David Nutt. The first edition of this work appeared in 1893, and the second in 1897; and it is only by years of revision and annotation that exact equivalents can be found in both languages—not merely a literal translation, but the phrase that a Frenchman would use when an Englishman says, e.g., 'every little helps' or 'that takes the cake.' For those preparing for examinations, such as those of the London, Victoria, or Welsh Universities, the Society of Arts, the Oxford and Cambridge Locals, or the Civil Service Commissioners, the book must be useful.

Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton are publishing 'The Origin of the Anglo-Boer War Revealed.' Although written by a Transvaal burgher, it upholds and vindicates British policy. The author is Mr. C. H. Thomas, formerly a prominent burgher of the Orange Free State, and until recently one of the best-known citizens of Belfast in the Transvaal.

The volume which Colonel Schiel is about to publish through Messrs. Methuen & Co. should furnish an important contribution to the history of the war. It is an account of his service with the Boers from 1896 until the battle of Elands Laagte, and of his subsequent experiences as a prisoner at St. Helena. By the way, it is only a few days since the gallant colonel wrote to a London newspaper, denying that he had ever said the prisoners were ill-treated by the British.

Among the announcements of Messrs. Methuen & Co. are cheaper editions of Stevenson's 'Letters,' Sven Hedin's 'Through Asia,' and 'Millais's Life and Letters.'

A new work of interest for the lover of out-door pursuits is announced in 'The Sportsman's and Tourist's Guide to the Lakes, Rivers, and Mountains of Ireland,' by Mr. T. O'Neill Lane. Amongst other interesting information the book will contain the law relating to fishing and shooting, seasons for salmon-fishing in the Irish rivers, seasons for shooting game, wild birds, &c., railway time tables, shootings and salmon-fishings in Ireland with details, hotel and other accommodation, &c.

Rumour is still rife about the number of books Mr. Winston Churchill is going to publish. According to the latest story, he has not yet decided whether he will write a full history of the war. The life of his father also apparently remains in abeyance. At the present moment Mr. Churchill seems to be devoting time with characteristic impetuosity to electioneering strategy.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing in their 'Little Guides' a small book on Westminster Abbey, by Miss G. E. Troutbeck, daughter of the late Canon Troutbeck. The book, which is illustrated by Mr. F. D. Bedford, describes the significance of the building and its legends and its architecture.

'A Man of Kent,' otherwise Dr. Robertson Nicoll, protests in the British Weekly against the notices of novels which appear in the Spectator. A quarter of a century ago a review of a new novel in the Spectator meant an immediate effect on sales. That is no longer the case, and could not be expected to be the case from the method pursued. To lump all the novels of the week into a column or a column and a half, giving a paragraph, or in some instances a few lines, to each, does the books noticed little or no good. The Spectator derives no small proportion of its revenue from publishers' advertisements, and, seeing that fiction contributes some eighty per cent. of the new books, it deserves better treatment than it has lately been receiving from the Spectator reviewer.

A series of hitherto unpublished diaries by Marie Bashkirtseff has been discovered. It will be remembered that the first portion of her papers, published under the editorship of the late Miss Mathilde Blind, made a sensation. The new diaries cover the last year of the unhappy girl's life. It is hoped that these confessions will be ready for serial publication in September; and they will be printed along with a romantic correspondence, anonymous on her part, between Marie Bashkirtseff and Guy de Maupassant.

'THE TIMES' COPYRIGHT CASE.

On Monday, before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Davey, Lord James of Hereford, Lord Brampton and Lord Robertson, the hearing of the important copyright case, Walter v. Lane, was concluded. The case, of which we have already given particulars, involves the question whether under the Act of 1842 copyright exists in respect of verbatim reports of speeches in the reporter, and by assignment in the newspaper proprietor employing him.

Mr. Joseph Walton, Q.C., Mr. Henry Terrell, Q.C., and Mr. MacSwinney were for the appellants; Mr. Birrell, Q.C., and Mr. Scrutton for the respondent.

The appellants' counsel had concluded their arguments on Friday, and Mr. Birrell had begun to address their lordships on behalf of the respondent.

Mr. Birrell, on behalf of the respondent, said the composers of these verbatim reports were not 'authors' within the Act of 1842. These addresses were, whether in fact written out or not by Lord Rosebery, original literary compositions. There could be no copyright of what is a copy of an original literary composition. By a 'copy' he meant a reproduction of ipsissima verba.

The Lord Chancellor said that the statutory meaning of the word 'copy' had to be ascertained. In one sense a picture might be a copy of nature; but that was not the sense in the Act.

Mr. Birrell submitted that each book must be regarded in connection with the independent labour involved. The gathering of information for a directory was original research as much as investigation of the archives in the British Museum or the Rolls. It was going to the source of knowledge, though the compilation of a directory was a humble form of research. Though the information was publici juris the task of collecting it was personal and independent. The clear and striking arrangement of streets and the topographical information involved considerable ability. Referring to Mr. Brain's affidavit, he said there was no question here 'of the features of the meeting and the material facts of, and the sense of, the speeches.' The descriptive part of these reports had not been used by the respondent, and it was not a question of 'material facts,' as the report was verbatim. Lord Rosebery misquoted Shakespeare; the error was repeated in the Times report, and the labour of verification and correction fell on the editor of this book of the respondent's. No doubt, if there were copyright in these reports, no one could use them by the insertion of merely colourable alterations. There was no evidence of the process of 'revising and editing,' which was referred to in the appellants' case. There was no evidence of independent labour. It was all mechanical work. Lord Rosebery's speeches were artistic productions, and there was no question of finishing or supplying omissions.

Lord James of Hereford asked whether there would be copyright in a compressed report.

Mr. Birrell said this question had been considered in the cases on abridgment. Anyone who honestly abridged a book was entitled to copyright. In the last century such abridgments were common, and even Rasselas had been so treated for the sake of the moral reflections. But an imperfect report was different from an abridgment.

Lord Davey understood that there had been an abridgment into one volume of 'Clarissa Harlowe.'

Mr. Birrell was happy to think the attempt had been a failure. 'Dickens v. Lee' (8 Jurist, 183), Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce had denied the universal right of abridgment.

The Lord Chancellor said that in that case it was the right as against the original author; no such question arose here.

Mr. Birrell said this was a case where res ipsa loquitur. These gentlemen had not the substantial labour indicated in the affidavits. Reading the Act counsel relied on the preamble of the statute. 'Whereas it is expedient to amend the law relating to copyright, and to afford greater encouragement to the production of literary works of lasting benefit to the world.' Then were mentioned certain Acts which were repealed and among them was that of the 8th of Queen Anne, the first law, he believed, in any country on the subject. He excepted, of course, the Licensing Acts. The statute of Anne was the first grant of a statutory period of protection. The term 'copy' arose from the author's taking his MS. to make his bargain with the publisher, who then took it as his copy. The registration was always effected by a member of the Stationers' Company.

Following Mr. Birrell, Mr. Scrutton said there was an important principle in copyright law which would be gravely compromised if the appellants were to succeed. Lord Rosebery might have reserved in the simplest way his own rights in his compositions. Under 5 and 6 William IV., c. 65 (the Lecture Act), he had only to give notice to two justices of the peace. There the Legislature speaks of taking down in shorthand as a 'copy.' If, again, Lord Rosebery had set it up in type, the reporters could have obtained no rights, as their work would have infringed the copyright in the matter already printed.

The Lord Chancellor pointed out that there was a proprietary right independent of copyright and of the Act which they were considering.

Mr. Scrutton said he wished to show that Lord Rosebery could have stopped the reporters. But Lord Rosebery took no such steps. 'Caird v. Sime' (12 App. Cases, 326) pointed out the results of a speaker's abandonment of his words to the world. It was a strange result that each reporter should have a separate copyright which even Lord Rosebery himself could not infringe.

The Lord Chancellor said the statute itself clearly provided for such cases.

Mr. Scrutton said that copyright was reserved for producers and not reproducers. Statutory property is only conferred on forms of words not published before; and publication could be either oral or written. There was a series of cases to show that when matter is printed no subsequent copyright could be acquired. In the case of a rare book, for example, the discoverer, who might be a great benefactor thereby, could acquire no copyright by republishing. In 'Carey v. Longman' (1 East, 358) a road-book was involved. The copyright had expired; the plaintiff had added new roads. It was held he had no copyright in the old part, but had in the additions. But even in the old part the new editor had to find out that the old road was still in existence. This case was under the Act which gave fourteen years' copyright—that of 1771. The judgment was by Lord Kenyon, who referred to Gray's Poems published by Mason. The only reason for the decision was that the old matter was not original. In 'Leslie v. Young' (1894, A.C., 335) the question was one of time-tables and circular tours; in the former, which only involved copying, there was held to be no copyright; in the circular tours there was copyright, as 'independent labour' was required; and that was the test. 'Wyatt v. Barnard' (3 V. and B., 77) was a case of copies of specifications from the Patent Office. The plaintiff was held by the Lord Chancellor to have no copyright in the English, but to have copyright in the translations from foreign cases. In Trade Auxiliary Company's case (40 Ch. D., 425; 58 L.J., Ch., 293) Lord Justice Lindley allowed copyright in copies of bills of sale inasmuch as the author had not merely collected, but had spent brain work on the collection. In section 3 of the Act of 1842, where the book, or part of the book, has appeared before, the labour of copying gives no right. So, on the same principle, no one who simply reproduces a set of words arranged by another can have copyright.

The Lord Chancellor.—For that argument to have force you would have to show that there is no difference between the written and the spoken word. Copyright deals with writing.

Mr. Scrutton said that the distinction between oral and written first arose under the International Act (7 Vict., c. 12, sec. 19). Under that section Mr. Boucicault claimed rights which were denied because the play had been published out of the Queen's dominion. In 'Boucicault v. Chatterton' (5 Ch. D., 267; 46 L.J., Ch., 305) the Court of Appeal held an oral representation was treated as publication. So in this case, Lord Rosebery's words were published and abandoned to the world.

Mr. MacSwinney, in reply, said an analogy was assumed to exist between copyright and patent law. Invention was demanded by the patent law; but the statute of 5 and 6 Victoria, with which alone their Lordships were concerned, made no condition of originality or invention. The sole issue was, Who is the author of this sheet of letterpress? Lord Rosebery was not the author. The case of photographs was analogous, and in 'Nottage v. Jackson' the copyright was in the person who took the photograph. He was the author, and the word itself was found in the Act. Sermons were referred to in a note to 'Caird v. Sime.' The case of sermons was there referred to, and the copyright was held to be in the person who committed the sermon to writing. It was absurd to rest the distinction on the skill or want of skill of the reporter, and to say, as in effect had been argued, that the degree of protection was in inverse proportion to the merit of the report. As to catalogues, see 'Maple v. Junior Army and Navy Stores' (21 Ch. D., 371; 52 L.J., Ch., 67). Mr. Birrell's plea for the compositors was more ingenious than sound, as the various steps in the production of the printed matter could not be split up. 'Butterworth v. Robinson' (5 Vesey, 709), which had been cited on the other side, appeared to protect the judgment as well as the headnote of law reports. This was a decision of Lord Loughborough's. The argument on which the judgment of the Court of Appeal was based involved an assumption and a preconceived notion of the meaning of the word 'author,' for which the Act itself afforded no authority.

The Lord Chancellor, at the conclusion of the arguments, said that the House would take time for consideration.

IRISH MANUSCRIPTS.

Replying to a question in the House of Commons, Mr. Hanbury, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, said the sum of £200 was voted from 1865 to 1870 for "'salary of Irish scribe and for cataloguing and printing Irish manuscripts' and from 1871 to 1890 for 'researches in connection with Celtic manuscripts.' In the Estimates for 1890-91 and up to 1896-97 this special item was merged in a grant of £400 for 'researches into and publication of Celtic MSS.' Since 1897-98 the grant to the Academy has been voted as a lump sum, but the Academy have from year to year allocated a similar amount to such researches. Since the death of Mr. O'Longan in 1880 the manuscripts have been reproduced by photolithography and the last one published was the Yellow-book of Leccan in 1895. The proceeds of the facsimiles published by the Academy have never been refunded to the Treasury. The receipts from the five volumes of 'Facsimiles of National Manuscripts of Ireland,' published by the Stationery Office, were, of course, paid into the Exchequer. The Academy is anxious to continue the publication of Celtic MSS. But it has full discretion as to the disposal of its grant-in-aid and recently it has devoted its income mainly to collecting material for a Thesaurus of the Irish language, which will be a most important aid to the study of the texts themselves.

SALE JOTTINGS.

Last week, as we have already mentioned, the remarkable collection of children's books formed by the late Mr. Tuer, of the Leadenhall Press, was sold by Messrs. Sotheby, Wilkinson & Hodge. The following were the more interesting items: Charles Lamb's 'Beauty and the Beast,' first edition—£43 (Tinkler); Charles and Mary Lamb's 'Mrs. Leicester's School,' 1810, 1814, 1820, third, fourth, and seventh editions—£42 (Sabin); 'Poetry for Children,' by the same, 1809, first edition—£81 (Sabin); a Horn-book, oak, covered in red paper, $3\frac{3}{8}$ in. by $2\frac{1}{2}$ in., 18th century—£18 (Ellis); a Horn-book, uncovered, with alphabet, &c., $3\frac{3}{4}$ in. by $2\frac{3}{4}$ in., early 19th century—£10. 10*s.* (B. F. Stevens); Horn-book, oak, covered with faded red paper, $3\frac{1}{4}$ in. by $2\frac{1}{4}$ in.—£11. 5*s.* (Quaritch); Horn-book, covered with leather, $3\frac{1}{2}$ in. $2\frac{3}{8}$ in.—£23. 5*s.* (Sotheran); Horn-book, covered in leather, $3\frac{7}{8}$ in. by $2\frac{3}{8}$ in., 17th century—£15 (Tregaskis); Horn-book in ivory, $6\frac{1}{2}$ in. square—£16. 10*s.* (Richards); Horn-book, ivory, full alphabet of large and small letters—£15. 10*s.* (Tregaskis); Horn-book, ivory, with a large alphabet on one side, and the small one on the other—£11. 15*s.* (Richards).

Last week also Messrs. Sotheby sold a miscellaneous collection of book manuscripts, comprising George Turberville's 'Epitaphs, Epigrams, Songs, and Sonnets,' 1570—£105 (Ripley); W. Shakespeare's 'Macbeth,' 1673, in a volume with several other plays—£113 (Sotheran); five quarto editions of Shakespeare's plays, 'Love's Labour's Lost,' 1631—£41 (Pickering); 'Pericles, Prince of Tyre,' 1635—£21. 10*s.* (Pickering); 'Romeo and Juliet,' 1637—£30 (Jonas); 'Henry the Fourth,' with the Battell at Shrewsbury, 1639—£20. 10*s.* (Pickering); and 'Othello,' 1655—£20 (Jonas); an imperfect copy of the second folio edition, 1632—£31 (Tregaskis); copy of the fourth folio, 1685—£48. 10*s.* (Pickering); R. L. Stevenson's original autograph MS. of 'The Body Snatcher,' 1884, 17 pages folio—£44. 10*s.* (Sabin); E. J. FitzGerald's 'Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam,' 1859, first edition—£35 (Stevens); Dr. Johnson's 'The Vanity of Human Wishes,' 1749, first edition—£16. 5*s.* (Denham); Oliver Goldsmith's 'Vicar of Wakefield,' 1766, first edition—£77 (Sabin); G. Chaucer's 'Workes,' printed by Kyngston, 1561—£15. 10*s.* (Maggs); Dr. Johnson's 'A Dictionary of the English Language,' 1755, first edition, in two volumes folio—£13 (Quaritch). Kelmscott Press publications: W. Morris' 'The Story of the Glittering Plain,' 1891—£30 (Maggs); D. G. Rossetti's 'Ballads' and 'Sonnets,' 1893 1894—£25 (Proctor); A. C. Swinburne's 'Atalanta in Calydon,' 1894—£15 (Maggs); W. Morris' 'The Life and Death of Jason,' 1895—£18. 10*s.* (Sotheran); and Geoffrey Chaucer, Works, 1896—£72 (Leighton); Dickens' 'Nicholas Nickleby,' 1839, first edition, presentation copy inscribed 'Mrs. George Cattermole from hers faithfully, Charles Dickens'—£25. 10*s.* (Sabin); Sir Walter Scott's 'Waverley,' 1814, first edition, with the half-titles in facsimile—£10. 15*s.* (Clarkson); Goldsmith's 'She Stoops to Conquer,' 1773, first edition—£12. 12*s.* (Pearson); Robert Burton's 'The Anatomy of Melancholy,' first edition—£20 (Pickering); Edmund Spenser's 'The Faerie Queene,' first edition, 1590—£50 (Robson); 'Laudes Beatæ Mariæ Virginis,' 1896, printed at the Kelmscott Press—£7. 10*s.* (Maggs); R. Kipling's 'Schoolboy Lyrics,' 1881, without wrapper—£8 (Denham); autograph letter from Charlotte Brontë to W. S. S. Williams, dated April 8, 1853, in reference to Lewes's 'hearty and generous treatment of "Villette,"' &c.—£9 (Pearson); Matthew Prior's 'Poems on Several Occasions,' 1707, first edition—£17. 10*s.* (Sabin); P. B. Shelley's 'The Cenci,' 1819, first edition, 'T. Jeffor. Hogg, from the author'—£11 (B. F. Stevens); an autograph letter from P. B. Shelley to Ollier, dated Marlow, August 8, 1817, concerning 'Alastor':—'I published some time since a poem called Alastor at Baldwin's; the sale, I believe, was scarcely anything,' &c.—£7. 10*s.* (Pearson); Earl of Chesterfield's 'Letters' written to his son, 1774, first edition—£10. 15*s.* (Denham); Cicero's 'Orationes,' printed by Valdarfer, Venice, 1471, the editio princeps—£10 (Quaritch).

Messrs. Hodgson included in their sale last week the following:—Keats's 'Lamia,' first edition, 1820, original boards, uncut, with Charles Lloyd's autograph on the half-title—£28. 10*s.* (Denham); Lloyd's 'Poems on the Death of Priscilla Farmer,' 1796, author's own copy, with MS. corrections—£7. 7*s.* 6*d.* (Pearson); Original MS. entitled 'Isabel,' written by Lloyd in 1789—£3. 3*s.* (Denham); Powell (P.) 'Poems, 1842,' with six lines of poetry by Leigh Hunt—£6. 15*s.* (Sabin); Leigh Hunt's 'Story of Rimini,' 1819, £3. 10*s.* (Denham); 'Huth Library Catalogue,' 5 vols.—£5 (Denham); Bandello's 'Novels,' by Payne, 6 vols.—£4. 10*s.* (Edwards); MS. 'Horæ' on vellum, with 5 miniatures—£15 (Dobell); Collection of Perspective Views of London, 59 coloured plates, folio, 1774—£11. 7*s.* 6*d.* (Spencer).

ARTISTIC COPYRIGHT.

The decision of Mr. Justice Byrne in the case of Marshall v. Petty is of considerable interest and importance in regard to the use of electros. The plaintiffs, said the learned Judge, sold certain blocks to Messrs. Evans & Williams for use in a catalogue. He found, as a fact, that the bargain between the parties was that a licence was given to Messrs. Evans & Williams to use the blocks for that purpose only. The defendants, Messrs. Petty & Sons, had insisted on the rights of Messrs. Evans & Williams, and contended that they were entitled, after having acquired the blocks from the former, to use them for any catalogue. Now, quite apart from the question whether a licence must or must not be in writing, he was of opinion that the case of 'Cooper v. Stephens' really substantially, if not entirely, covered the questions of law taken by the defendants, Messrs. Petty & Sons, in this case. 'Cooper v. Stephens' was a case where the plaintiffs were the registered owners of the copyright in books containing illustrations drawn by themselves of carriages, and their principal business was to supply copies of the drawings to persons in the carriage trade for advertising purposes, the copies being generally printed by themselves and supplied to the customers on advertising sheets. In the present case, a fortiori, there was a very substantial part of the plaintiffs' book taken. The case of Cooper v. Stephens practically covers, if not entirely, the points of law that had been taken in the present case. The first point, speaking generally, was that the registration was insufficient in the present case, the plaintiffs not having registered their copyright prior to the transaction when the blocks were sold for the very purpose he had mentioned, and it was said that if a man being possessed of a copyright in a book, not having registered that copyright, chooses to sell or license another to use one of the illustrations in that book, he is thereby debarred from afterwards asserting his right in the copyright in that portion of the book because he had not registered under the Fine Arts Act, 1862. He was of opinion that a man, being possessed of a copyright in a book, did not lose that copyright by reason of the grant of a partial licence, or of a licence to use it, and that he was not prevented from suing an infringer if, before action brought, he registered his book. The plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction.

MRS. RADCLIFFE'S NOVELS.

Mrs. Radcliffe keeps the many entangled threads of her complex web well in hand, and incidents which puzzle you at the beginning fall naturally into place before the end. The character of the heroine's silly, vain, unkind, and unreasonable aunt is vividly designed (that Emily should mistake the corse of a moustached bandit for that of her aunt is an incident hard to defend). Valancourt is not an ordinary spotless hero, but sows his wild oats, and reaps the usual harvest; and Annette is a good sample of the usual soubrette. When one has said that the landscapes and bandits of this romance are worthy of Poussin and Salvator Rosa, from whom they were probably translated into words, not much remains to be added. Sir Walter, after repeated perusals, considered 'Udolpho' 'a step beyond Mrs. Radcliffe's former work, high as that had justly advanced her.' But he admits that 'persons of no mean judgment' preferred the 'Romance of the Forest.' With these persons I would be ranked. The ingenuity and originality of the 'Romance' are greater; our friend the skeleton is better than that Thing which was behind the Black Veil, the escapes of Adeline are more thrilling than the escape of Emily, and the 'Romance' is not nearly so long, not nearly so prolix as 'Udolpho.'

The roof and crown of Mrs. Radcliffe's work is 'The Italian' (1797), for which she received £800.

Why Mrs. Radcliffe, having reached such a pitch of success, never again published a novel, remains more mysterious than any of her Mysteries. Scott justly remarks that her censors attacked her 'by showing that she does not possess the excellences proper to a style of composition totally different from that which she has attempted.' This is the usual way of reviewers. Tales that fascinated Scott, Fox, and Sheridan, 'which possess charms for the learned and unlearned, the grave and gay, the gentleman and clown,' do not deserve to be dismissed with a sneer by people who have never read them. Following Horace Walpole in some degree, Mrs. Radcliffe paved the way for Scott, Byron, Maturin, Lewis, and Charlotte Brontë, just as Miss Burney filled the gap between Smollett and Miss Austen. Mrs. Radcliffe, in short, kept the Lamp of Romance burning much more steadily than the lamps which, in her novels, are always blown out, in the moment of excited apprehension, by the night wind walking in the dank corridors of haunted abbeys. But mark the cruelty of an intellectual parent! Horace Walpole was Mrs. Radcliffe's father in the spirit. Yet on September 4, 1794, he wrote to Lady Ossory: 'I have read some of the descriptive verbose tales, of which your Ladyship says I was the patriarch by several mothers' (Miss Reeve and Mrs. Radcliffe?). 'All I can say for myself is that I do not think my concubines have produced issue more natural for excluding the aid of anything marvellous.'

(Mr. Andrew Lang in the Cornhill Magazine.)

THE LATE MR. BLACKMORE AND THE CRITICS.

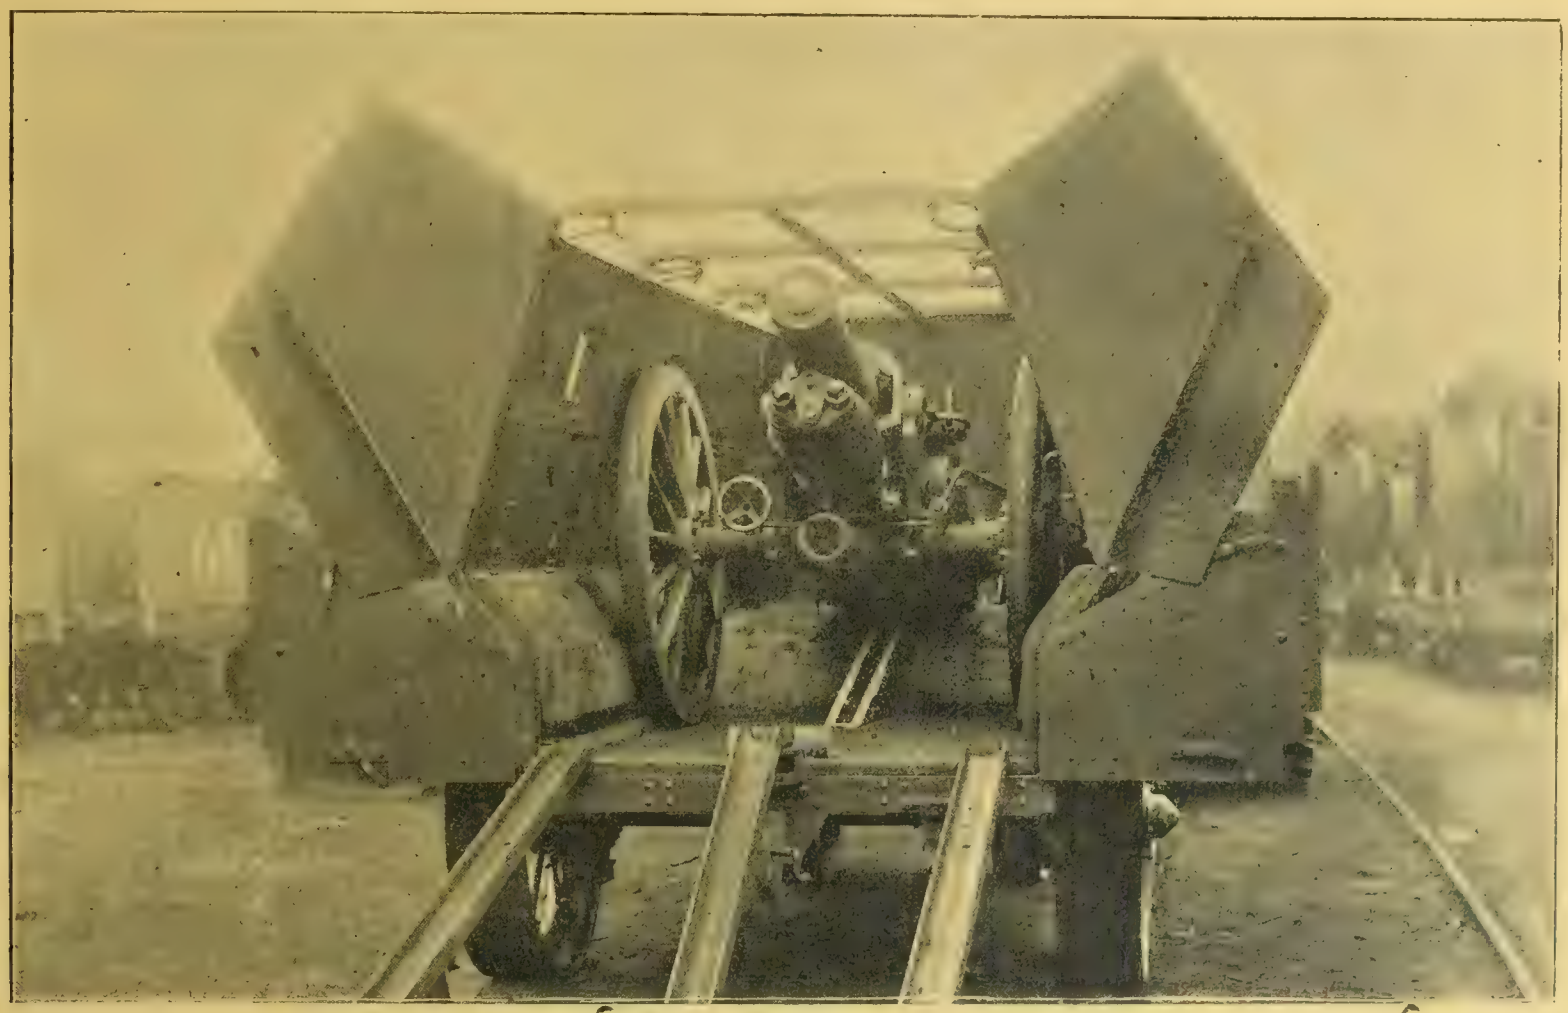
In some letters published in America, and reproduced in part by Dr. Nicoll in the British Weekly, the late Mr. Blackmore refers to his experience of reviewers. Speaking of 'Kit and Kitty,' he says that it 'has met with some rough words here, but that has been the fate of all, especially "Lorna Doone," now so popular. If I have got on and obtained kind readers, I have none of the Press to thank for it. From first to last—with a few exceptions—the English critics—if they deserve the name—have pegged away at me like a rook at a rotten apple. Sometimes I used to be annoyed, though I never let them know it; but now it never disturbs me. There is not one among them now who knows the nib from the tail of his pen. But that is of little moment, and so is all contemporary opinion. Time alone settles the float or sink; and it makes little odds to the man who has lived, unless what floats is his garbage. Then he had better not have lived at all.'

Speaking about his own books, Mr. Blackmore says: 'I am sure I don't know which of my books I like best, or whether I like any of them much. After all they appear to me to be rubbish, and in none of them have I ever satisfied myself. There is something rather childish in "Lorna Doone," I think; and my opinion is confirmed by that of good judges. Perhaps, taken altogether, "Alice Lorraine" is the best; though that is spun out and feeble in many places.' He denies that living persons are described in 'Perlycross.' 'Only two of the characters are taken from actual persons—one my own father, and the other his schoolmaster, whose son highly approves of my sketch. And to suppose that the present Bishop of London (Dr. Temple) in any way resembles "the Hopper" was a little too absurd. As a boy some years his junior, I was placed under his care at school; but he soon went off to Oxford, and I became a boarder.'

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Chatto & Windus.—'A Young Dragon,' by Sarah Tytler. We have read this novel with genuine pleasure. Miss Tytler has a shrewd knowledge of character, coupled with an appreciation of the more humorous aspects of Scotch rural life, and this renders her work peculiarly acceptable to those who are interested in the thoughts and actions of their fellow beings. But it must be confessed that she sometimes fails to rise to the strength of the situations she has planned out—as, for instance, in the confession of disgrace by Lil Lamont and the subsequent appearance on the scene of Captain Fleming—and it is by the womanliness of her style and her insight into homely character that she chiefly excels. Nowadays when artificiality is such a marked feature of our fiction, and the attributes of actual life are lost sight of in the desire for originality and smartness, it is refreshing to find a writer who has still power to charm us by the depth of her observation and unaffected powers of narration. But the school, we are sadly afraid, is fast dying out, and the Gaskells and Oliphants of a bygone generation are not easy to replace.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Idea of Tragedy in Ancient and Modern Drama.' Three lectures delivered at the Royal Institution, February 1900, by W. L. Courtney, with a prefatory note by A. W. Pinero. To those who take something more than a superficial interest in the stage and dramatic literature, these lectures will prove exceedingly interesting. The least popular portion of the work will naturally be the commencement, in which Mr. Courtney speaks of the early classics Æschylus, Sophocles, and Euripides, and truth to tell he does seem a little laboured in his treatment of these dead men's efforts, but once he gets to Shakespeare and the later dramatists he is on more familiar ground and writes with spontaneity and earnest effect. Throughout there is a clear manifestation that the book has been written for one of the 'learned societies.' Mr. Pinero's prefatory note is most courteously worded, and shows what a complete master of graceful diction he is.



THE FOWLER ARMOURED ROAD TRAIN, SHOWING HOW GUN IS HAULED INTO THE ARMOURED TRUCK BY THE ENGINE.

From 'Mechanical Traction in War for Road Transport' (Sampson Low & Co.)

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Charles Francis Adams,' by his son, Charles Francis Adams. There is something so sturdy and self-reliant about the American character that it is always interesting to read of the career of their public men; but how much more is this the case when the subject of the biography is a statesman of the prominence and personal ability of Charles Francis Adams! His son takes up his history from its very earliest days, and in the first chapter traces his parentage, which was of pure English descent. As a boy Mr. Adams had a somewhat eventful life, for, his father, John Quincy Adams, who also was a man of great attainments and indubitable energy, having been appointed by President Madison first Minister of the United States to Russia, he spent eight years of his boyhood at St. Petersburg. In the early part of 1815, that memorable year fraught with the destinies of so many European nations, he was in Paris, and always afterwards had a vivid recollection of looking up, a boy in the surging crowd, and seeing the Emperor as he stood on the balcony of the Tuileries acknowledging the acclamations of the multitude below. The next two years he spent with his parents in England, being sent to a school at Ealing, kept by one Dr. Nicholas. The knowledge of French cultivated at St. Petersburg and the insight into the English character gained during his school life at Ealing were of material advantage to Mr. Adams at an after period of his career. Returning to America in 1817, he was for some time under the care of his grandmother, Mrs. John Adams, a good woman whose influence had a lasting impression upon him. When scarcely fourteen he entered Harvard, graduating four years later. He afterwards studied law as a profession, believing that this calling also afforded a stepping-stone to other advancement. The active public life of Mr. Adams was confined to thirteen years—that is, between December 1859 and November 1872—and to the history of those years, and the share he took in their events, his son's biography is mainly devoted. When it is remembered what troublous times America passed through during this period, and all the unrest and excitement engendered by the slavery question, the great interest of the record can be imagined. It is a very capable work, the prelude, we understand, to a larger volume on the same subject, but treated on totally different lines.

From Messrs. Charles Griffin & Co.—'Year-Book of the Scientific and Learned Societies of Great Britain and Ireland.' Seventeenth annual issue. It is really almost impossible for anyone to comprehend all that is being done in a quiet and unostentatious way for the cause of science and learning until he has turned over the pages of this book. The number of men who apparently meet in private, discuss matters with which their own vocation in life has made them particularly well acquainted, and read papers, is actually marvellous and testifies most strongly to their zeal and personal endeavour. But apart from this consideration, the book has another and more practical value. It is an exceedingly useful guide to the different societies, their office-bearers, and literary contributors, and a carefully compiled index renders reference a matter of easy achievement. The book can scarcely fail to be of the greatest use to those who are interested in the progress of science.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'The Person in the House,' by C. H. Burgin. We must confess to a feeling of disappointment at this story. Mr. Burgin is rather a tantalising writer. He is constantly leading us to anticipate that he is about to do really good work, of which his achievements in the past have shown him to be perfectly capable, and then degenerating into the usual froth and irresponsible vivacity. A little more [illegible] the desires of the reading public of to-day, and that these artificial hastily 'dashed-off' stories are more likely to catch the attention of the popular section of novel-readers than a [illegible] we do not pronounce an opinion; but, at [illegible] it is a high price to pay for the [illegible] one's ideals. 'The Person of the [illegible] plot. The book takes its name from a little girl who is adopted by a tender-hearted old gentleman with an unsympathetic wife, and very soon becomes, from the hold she exercises over his affections, the ruling spirit of the establishment. But the wife has also adopted a child, in this case a low-bred, evil-dispositioned boy, and matters culminate when Master Soames pushes little Stella into the river, and the grief-stricken old gentleman retaliates by flinging the gutter brat out of the window, and thus breaking his neck. But the children after all do not occupy a very important position in the narrative, which is more interestingly concerned with the love affairs of some older people. We are also introduced into the inner workings of a Society journal, conducted on what seem rather original editorial lines.

From Mr. John Long.—'Bettina,' by May Crommelin. Miss Crommelin's story possesses the great merit of gradually increasing in interest as it proceeds, and in the concluding portion quite a sensational series of incidents are developed. Bettina is the name of an independent, high-spirited young girl of Italian descent, who as an infant was left at the gates of a rich Scotch merchant in St. Petersburg, and was eventually adopted by her kindly-hearted rescuer and his wife. Her after-experiences form the basis of the narrative, and are related by the author in the sympathetic graceful style which we have learnt to associate with her writings. The most exciting portion of the plot is where Bettina is decoyed into the power of the villainous Cæsar Gaddi, and her efforts to elude him are certain to arouse deep interest. However, thanks to the assistance of a brave lover, and other propitious circumstances, she eventually manages to escape, and the story ends very happily to the approaching sound of wedding bells. Miss Crommelin has written few stories that more attractively exhibit her distinctions of style.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited.—'Mechanical Traction in War for Road Transport, with Notes on Automobiles generally,' by Lieut.-Col. Otfried Layriz, of the German Army. Translated by R. B. Marston. The subject dealt with in this volume is one not only of intrinsic interest but of great practical importance. With the necessity nowadays in time of war of quickly conveying our field pieces over long distances of ground the value of the traction engine becomes a matter of the utmost moment, and indeed it is not too much to say that the battle of the future will often be decided by the rapidity with which this movement can be executed. No little of the endurance of the Boers, it may be noted, in the present campaign has been the result of their skill in digging trenches, to say nothing of the mobility with which they have shifted their forces; and here we have an instance of the great value of mechanical aids as opposed to the ordinary weapons of warfare. There is also another department in which the traction engine can be of infinite service—in the conveyance of supplies. For these reasons, therefore, Lieut.-Col. Layriz's volume should meet with an extremely cordial reception in this country. The reader will find the various aspects of the subject treated in a lucid and most comprehensive manner. Commencing with some remarks on the necessity of mechanical traction and its many advantages, the author next proceeds to give a history of the gradual incoming of the road engine, its first use in war, &c., and remaining sections are devoted to a consideration of the automobile without train, the automobile as traction engine, the adaptability of the motor car to this form of service, the attempts that have been made to replace the steam motor by other kinds of motors, the relation of supply transport by means of traction engines to that by field railways, and the necessity that exists for mechanical road traction being general in a country before it can be usefully applied in time of war. It should be mentioned that the translator, Mr. R. B. Marston, has added some very interesting and illuminative footnotes, as well as a reference in the Appendix to the use of the traction engine in the South African War, and that the illustrations have been amplified by some valuable pictures of early road engines and carriages, which testify in very conclusive manner to the great improvements that have been effected of late years. Of the illustrations generally we give a specimen in 'The Fowler Armoured Road Train ordered by Lord Roberts (showing how the gun is hauled into the Armoured Truck by the Engine).' This, with other illustrations, is included by permission of the proprietors of the Daily Graphic.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Dwight L. Moody: the Life Work of a Modern Evangelist,' by the Rev. John Herridge Batt. A pleasantly written account of a life, which is full of interest, is given in this volume. The late Mr. Moody was a man of vigorous character, tenacious in his grasp of any project he had taken up, and unwearying in his efforts to benefit his fellow men. Opposition had only the effect of stimulating him to greater efforts. Mr. Batt calls him 'the Great Heart of modern evangelism in England and America,' and although the term may sound a trifle inflated, there is no doubt that he was a powerful instrument in stirring up religious enthusiasm. His very thoroughness and masterful energy evoked respect. The simple details of his life which are gathered into this volume will appeal with interest to the large number of his admirers in this country, and considering the material at his disposal, the author may be said to have performed his work well.

From C. Arthur Pearson, Limited.—'The Legend of Eden,' by Harry Lauder. This is a story of that happy, irresponsible Bohemian life which is supposed to be the special province of artists, dramatic authors, actresses, and such like. The inconvenience of such an existence, which it requires the assistance of youth to digest, are gaily displayed, but not the actual privations and pains. In this case, however, it so happens that one of the three friends happens to be a man of means, who can readily supply the wants of his companions. He is a strange fellow, this 'Patriarch' Leith, with a vein of cynical humour apparently developed from a previous career of light-hearted dissipation, and it is not surprising, therefore, to find that, though passing as a bachelor, he is actually the victim of an unfortunate marriage. There is also a beautiful actress who is attached to him, and she is the means of his obtaining an important success as a dramatic author. The usual scene of tempted manhood takes place, but Leith rises superior to the situation. Then the wife reappears and seeks to attract him back to his old allegiance, but here again he is adamantine itself. Fortunately she is struck down with heart disease, and the way is happily cleared for his union with the actress. There is likewise a little surprise for all concerned at the conclusion of the narrative. The story is very brightly written, and the characterisation is crisp and suggestive.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Little Indabas: Stories of Kaffir, Boer, and Natal Life,' by J. Mac. ('Overseas Library.') For light reading these scorching summer days we can confidently recommend the stories composing this volume. They are full, too, of interesting revelations of Boer and Kaffir characteristics, from which the reader can derive some knowledge of the different feelings that animate the various races in South Africa. 'The White Patched Kaffir,' for instance, supplies a very amusing instance of a Kaffir's skill in lying and the plausibility with which he will concoct a long string of deceptions. As the author well says: 'In lies a Kaffir can give you 99 out of 100, and before you are half-way through with your one, you'll find him sitting on ahead of you, with his snuff-box out, maintaining he is a truthful man.' Then, in another story, 'The Fear of the Unknown,' we have an unlaboured but none the less graphic picture of the roughness of the Boer home life, its utter want of social refinement, and coarse brutality. Civilisation, however, in some respects would seem to have an enervating influence, and no one can complain that the Boers have not plenty of backbone and dogged obstinacy.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

'Unquestionably capital pens. . . . Beautifully soft and fluent writing pens.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

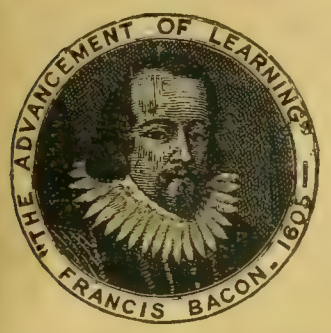
IMPORTANT

ALL who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the



Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following :—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some HUNDREDS OF OUT-OF-PRINT BOOKS are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

THE PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

THE RE-BINDING OF BOOKS & OVERSEWING

When books are purchased in publishers' covers and put into circulation before they are sent to the binders, the fold in the back of the sections becomes more or less weakened, frequently rendering it necessary that the leaves of the book should be oversewed if an effectual binding is to be made.

If you examine books which have been oversewed you will find that they will break back to the quick on being opened between the sections.

If, however, you open books which (in order to remedy the weakening in the folds due to previous binding) have been oversewed in Cedric Chivers' Duro-flexile method, you will not discover any weakness between the sections. The book is whole, solid and intact from beginning to end.

Formerly I was obliged to charge 5d. per crown 8vo. extra for this work, but by the invention of special devices I am now able to oversew all Lending Library crown 8vos. at no extra cost.

Publishers with books in single leaves who desire to have them effectually sewed, would do well to see this sewing.

CEDRIC CHIVERS, PORTWAY, BATH.

OUR AUTUMN EDUCATIONAL NUMBER

This will be issued on August 18, and will as usual contain a large amount of information peculiarly suitable for those engaged in scholastic work, notes on forthcoming educational books, reviews of new volumes, &c., &c. Every endeavour in short will be made to render it of interest to the heads of schools and colleges and of practical value to the Trade. As in former years copies will be posted to all the large educational establishments of the United Kingdom, and to many in the Colonies and on the Continent.

Advertisements should be sent as soon as possible, addressed to the Manager of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C., and endorsed 'Educational Number.'

'A week or two before the death of Mr. R. D. Blackmore, Messrs. Sampson Low arranged with him to bring out a new edition of "Lorna Doone"—an arrangement, as it turned out, which terminated, they tell us, "that most friendly and cordial intercourse which his publishers had with him for over thirty years." That edition has just been issued, and is in singularly attractive form. "Lorna Doone" is a long story—here it extends to 687 pages—and the type is large, but by the use of the India paper the volume is of very handy size, and is admirably suited for the pocket. It can be had in either cloth or leather binding. The reprinting opposite the title-page of the verses by the late novelist's old friend, Mr. Arthur Manby, which appeared in the Athenæum at the time of Mr. Blackmore's death, was a very happy idea.'

The Publishers' Circular

In Memoriam.

With profound regret we record the death of

HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS PRINCE ALFRED DUKE OF SAXE-COBURG-GOTHA,

Second son of Her Majesty the Queen, which took place suddenly on Monday night, at Rosenau Castle, near Coburg. The nation unites in heartfelt condolence to Her Majesty.

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.,
August 3, 1900.

The practice of patriotism in these difficult times is at once a privilege and a duty; but to mix patriotism, especially of the violent blood-and-thunder kind, with literary criticism is a doubtful method of serving one's country. Mr. W. E. Henley has lately been making certain experiments in this direction, and he can hardly be congratulated on the result. A short time ago he nearly spoiled an otherwise excellent appreciation of the late Mr. G. W. Steevens by gratuitous and wholly uncalled-for vituperation of the 'mad and criminal old man at Pretoria;' and in the Pall Mall Magazine for August he opens a eulogy of Byron with a school-boy glorification over 'the braves on Laing's Nek' (whoever they may be) being 'like a nut in a pair of crackers.' Now we all rejoice quite as ardently as Mr. Henley in the triumph of the British arms in South Africa, but what in the name of the seven wonders has Laing's Nek to do with Byron's poetry? Mr. Henley refers to a conflagration lighted by Byron, 'a conflagration which has not done blazing yet . . . to the lasting disgust of many learned critics now engaged in talking Shakespeare and the musical glasses to a Kiplingising world.' King Charles's head in these days takes many forms, and we presume it would be unreasonable to expect Mr. Henley to write concerning anything in the heaven above or in the earth beneath or in the waters under the earth without introducing Mr. Kipling's name. Mr. Kipling has himself been writing sketches of South African history which the majority of his admirers would like to see blotted from the list of his works—not on the score of sentiment but on the score of merit. A page of 'The Drums of the Fore and Aft' is worth all the South African sketches.

In defending and lauding Byron—for the article is partly defence, partly laudation—Mr. Henley falls foul of later poets, major and minor. He is particularly severe on Browning. Thus he writes: 'That mass of half-inspired, half-realised, half-uttered, and wholly perfunctory and futile gabble which—some noble pages apart—is Browning, what has become of it all? The Societies are dead, the "Primers" (this was a poet whom you had to read with a crib, as though he had been no decent middle-class Englishman, but "an ancient who wrote crabbed Greek in no silly days"), the "Primers," I repeat, have gone the way of all waste; the reading of riddles and the reading of poetry have once more come to be recognised as two distinct and several branches of intellectual activity. That the Browning craze was real while it lasted is, I suppose, a fact. But it lasted but a year or two, whereas the Byron craze, or rather what is left of it, is with us still, or Mr. Murray would not be producing a more or less final edition of the "Poems" and "Letters," and I should not have laid myself out to make an edition of Byron the end of my literary life.' All students of literature are grateful to Mr. Murray for the splendid edition of Byron's works which he is now publishing, and we eagerly await the completion of Mr. Henley's edition. In particular we await with eagerness the promised essay on Byron. But in order to appreciate one poet it is surely not necessary to depreciate another. Certainly it is not the method of true criticism.

We say all this with regret, remembering the magnificent work Mr. Henley has done in pure literature. As critic and poet he occupies a distinguished place. The Centenary Edition of Burns, which he edited in conjunction with Mr. Henderson, is, without any exception, the best edition of the Scottish poet's works we possess; and his essay on the character and genius of Burns is also the best we possess, with the single exception of Carlyle's. Beside these two all other appreciations of Burns are colourless. Nor must we forget the rare and delicate piece of criticism with which opens the anthology of English lyrics published three years ago by Messrs. Methuen. In poetry, too, Mr. Henley has produced things that are a pure delight; things, too, that will last, if any poetry of the present generation will last. But of late personal bias has been too conspicuous in his writings, and in criticism bias is a disastrous ingredient—disastrous, that is to say, to the critic.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was among the earliest subscribers to 'The Times History of the War in South Africa,' now in course of preparation by the Times and Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. The work will be ready in October, and the five volumes will be similar in size and get-up to the handsome volumes of Sir Herbert Maxwell's 'Wellington.' The set is to be published at £2. 12s. 6d., a figure almost unique in publishing in the case of the first issue of such magnitude. Although it has only just been announced, orders are fast coming in, and we think it is to the interest of our readers to draw their attention to the special notice given on another page, respecting the closing of the subscription list. In arranging to publish this work in conjunction with the Times, Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. made a point of getting much more favourable terms for the trade than has hitherto been given on works published in this way in connection with a great newspaper, and it is to be hoped that booksellers will appreciate and benefit by this arrangement.

Messrs. Methuen have decided to publish Miss Marie Corelli's new book, 'The Master Christian,' on August 29. It may be of interest to note that the number (75,000) printed of this book before publication is, so far as the publishers know, the largest on record. It is believed that for no previous novel of this century has the demand been so great as to justify the printing of 75,000 copies a month before publication.

By arrangement with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co., Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Sons are enabled to issue the complete works of Thackeray in their 'New Century Library' of India paper novels. The edition will consist of fourteen volumes, and will be completed this year. Under these circumstances the issue of the first volumes of Scott's novels in the 'New Century Library' will be postponed till December.

Another book on the Himalayas. This is the production of two enterprising Americans, Mrs. Fanny Bulloch Workman and her husband. For more reasons than mere courtesy it is right that the lady's name should be mentioned first, for a woman who can climb three peaks, varying in height from 18,000 to 21,000 feet, can fairly claim to have accomplished something beyond the power of the ordinary man. And climb these peaks Mrs. Workman did, and in testimony thereof one of them has been christened Mount Fanny Bulloch Workman. The volume is to be published by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

In our note about Mr. Winston Churchill's publishing intentions last week, we omitted to mention that there is one book at least from his pen, dealing with a portion of the war, which is certain to appear. This is 'Ian Hamilton's March; being letters reprinted from the Morning Post, with some unpublished letters,' which is to be published early in the autumn by Messrs. Longmans & Co. The volume will include a coloured map and several battle-plans.

Messrs. Methuen are publishing immediately the annals of the Walkers of Southgate, a brotherhood of famous cricketers, written by Mr. W. A. Bettesworth, of the Sussex Eleven. This is a complete historical record of this celebrated cricketing family, written and compiled with the full co-operation of the surviving members, and materially embellished by the personal reminiscences of sundry cricketers.

Mr. Thomas Holmes, the well-known police-court missionary, has probably had better opportunities of studying certain types of the London poor than any one else. A volume embodying his experiences which is soon to be published by Mr. Edward Arnold should therefore be interesting. We can only hope that the author will be able from his intimate knowledge of the subject to make some practical suggestions as to the more effective treatment of habitual drunkards, boy criminals, and such like, but these are admittedly difficult problems to tackle.

Mr. John Murray is about to add 'The Gypsies in Spain' to his revised edition of Borrow's works.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. will shortly publish a new and cheaper edition of Mr. Richard R. Holmes's 'Queen Victoria,' with a supplementary chapter bringing the narrative up to the Queen's visit to Ireland. It will contain a photogravure portrait.

Messrs. Methuen's list of autumn fiction is unusually strong. In addition to 'The Master Christian,' by Marie Corelli, the firm has in hand for early publication novels by Anthony Hope, Arthur Morrison, Henry James, Stephen Crane, Lucas Malet, R. S. Hichens, W. W. Jacobs, and S. Baring-Gould. Among the earliest to be published are Baring-Gould's 'Winifred' and Lucas Malet's 'The Gateless Barrier.'

'A Friend of Cæsar: a Tale of the Fall of the Roman Republic,' is a romance written by William Stearns Davis, published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., which has a Drusus for its hero and a Cornelia for its heroine, and which aims to give a picture of life in Rome and Alexandria at the climax of Cæsar's fortunes. Among the incidents depicted are the crossing of the Rubicon, the battle of Pharsalia, the murder of Pompey, and Cæsar's escape by swimming in the harbour of Alexandria. Among the Roman personages figure prominently on Cæsar's side Curio and Mark Antony, on that of the Senate Lentulus and Gabinius; while both at Rome and Alexandria there is a crowd of subordinate figures, Greek slaves, freedmen, and eunuchs. Mr. Davis does not even shrink from introducing Cleopatra with all her fascinations.

A new novel by Mr. John Oxenham, entitled 'A Princess of Vascovy,' is published this week by Messrs. Bousfield & Co.

On Speech Day at Blundell's School, the headmaster, Mr. A. L. Francis, paid a graceful tribute to the late Mr. R. D. Blackmore, 'the most loyal of all the sons of Blundell's, and the creator of the great Blundell's epic, "Lorna Doone."'

A novel by a new writer, Mr. Alexander Macdougall, is announced by Mr. Fisher Unwin. The plot of 'Allen Lorne' scarcely seems so unfamiliar as the name of the author, seeing that it deals with the doings of a clever young man who, by his heterodox views of religion, scandalises and alienates the class to which he belongs; but the treatment after all is the main point.

It seems strange to write of a new book by Fenimore Cooper. But 'Ned Myers,' by Cooper, which Messrs. Putnam's Sons announce, has never previously been published.

Messrs. Methuen are just publishing the second number of their Rochester Dickens. This book contains 'Nicholas Nickleby' in two volumes, illustrated by Mr. R. J. Williams. Mr. George Gissing contributes an introduction, and Mr. F. F. Kitton topographical notes.

The eighth and cheaper edition, revised and enlarged, of Canon MacColl's 'Reformation Settlement: examined in the Light of History and Law,' which Messrs. Longmans have in hand, is now nearly ready. The book, originally published in May 1899, we understand, has been out of print for some time. The introductory letter to Sir William Harcourt is omitted in the new edition, but there are 180 pages of fresh matter in the shape of two additional chapters, one containing an exhaustive examination of the Lambeth decisions on Incense and Reservation and of Mr. Dibdin's speeches, the other a reply to the criticism of Professor Maitland, of Cambridge, in the Fortnightly Review of last December.

'The Distribution of Wealth: a Theory of Wages, Interest, and Profits,' is a very important contribution to social science by John Bates Clark, Professor of Political Economy in Columbia University. The plan of the work is somewhat unusual, since the main proposition is laid down at the outset in simple terms, and the rest of the book may be said to consist in defining the terms and explaining the full significance of the central theory. This theory is that the distribution of the income of society is controlled by a natural law, and that this law, if it worked ideally, would give to every agent of production the amount of wealth which that agent creates. And since the agents of production are these—labour, capital, and the co-ordinating process performed by employers of labour and users of capital—it follows that Mr. Clark endeavours to prove that wages at any given time tend to equal the actual product of labour, interest to equal the actual product of capital, and profit the actual product of the energy which establishes and maintains a relation between the two prime factors of production. But, naturally, to develop this thesis it is necessary to explain, for instance, the position assigned to rent and a host of similar questions; and the result is a volume of nearly 450 pages, dealing with the economic problems connected with production in all its aspects, which is issued by Messrs. Macmillan & Co.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston have issued a capital map, beautifully coloured and clearly printed, of the territory involved in the present Chinese question. After the usual fashion, it presents one fairly large map, and a number of smaller ones illustrating in greater detail special portions of the China continent, environs of Pekin, Port Arthur, Wei-hai-Wei, Kiao-Chau, &c. The map should command a large sale.

We regret to announce the death, in his sixtieth year, of Mr. Alfred Thomas Shrimpton, the last of the well-known firm of Oxford booksellers.

The war and subjects directly or indirectly connected with it are still prominent in the reviews. The Nineteenth Century this month has several articles devoted to the Army and military reform. Sir James Blyth, Sir John Wolfe Barry, Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, and others write of the 'ordinary business principles' on which a government ought to conduct its affairs, especially so far as the War Office is concerned. Lord Northbrook contributes a very brief paper on 'Our Infantry,' and Mr. W. S. Blunt a longer and more important one on 'How to Breed Horses for War.' Considering the difficulties to which the scarcity of horses in South Africa has given rise, it is to be hoped that Mr. Blunt's arguments will be taken to heart in the right quarter. Mr. A. G. Berry, late Secretary of the Australian Federal Delegates, discusses the new commonwealth in a manner which will enlighten the man in the street; and the Bishop of Hereford has a capital subject for a bishop in 'The Slow Growth of Moral Influence in Politics.' The growth, indeed, is so slow as hardly to be perceptible. The bishop, by the way, makes good use of the Rhodes incident in imperial politics. Mr. J. A. R. Marriott is a little belated with his paper on 'The Imperial Note in Victorian Poetry,' but it is well worth reading. We are glad to see he singles out Mr. Henry Newbolt's ballads for special praise. Mr. Frederick Greenwood writes with his usual acumen on 'The Chinese Revolt.' Mr. Greenwood is one of the shrewdest of our political critics, and this is in his best vein. Politicians ought to find it edifying.

THE OXFORD ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

A correspondent, who is evidently a careful student of the 'Oxford English Dictionary,' sends to the Periodical published by Mr. Henry Frowde some ingenious calculations based on the dimensions of the Dictionary from the beginning of Volume I. to the word Infer, but excluding from Graded to the end of G. Allowing for short columns, it will be found that as many as 16,516 columns, 10⅛ inches long, have now appeared. If these columns, each 2½ inches wide, were set on end the type would extend for upwards of 2½ miles—4,645 yards; or, say,

Nearly four times as high as Snowdon.

Only 602 yards short of the height of Mont Blanc.

Over 38 times as high as to the top of the Cross on St. Paul's Cathedral.

Nearly 69 times the height of the Monument.

More than 14 times as high as the Eiffel Tower.

Upwards of 15 times the length of London Bridge.

Almost 100 times round the dome of the reading-room of the British Museum.

If a maypole were made of the Monument, there would be sufficient type to provide 69 strings, each 202 feet long.

A single column of type with the lines placed end to end would measure 7 yards 2 feet. The lines already in print, end to end, would reach for about 72 miles, or a little further than from Charing Cross to Folkestone. A single column, taken haphazard, contains 4,248 letters, punctuation marks, &c., and 746 words, including 59 abbreviated words; taking this column as a basis the Dictionary already contains about 70,161,384 letters and 12,321,181 words. Not the least remarkable feature of the Dictionary is its price. For a penny a purchaser receives 1 yard 1 foot and 8 odd inches of solid printed matter, 2½ inches wide, on unexceptionable paper, turned out in the best manner of the University Press.

Dr. Murray points out in his note to In–Infer that those who are interested in the length of words will observe that incircumscriptibleness has as many letters as honorificabilitudinity, viz. 22. The authority quoted for the former word is one Byfield, a divine, who in a treatise on Colossians, published in 1615, wrote: 'The immensity of Christ's divine nature hath . . . incircumscriptibleness in respect of place.' In the recent biography of Dr. Benson is an entry from the Archbishop's diary to the effect that 'the Free Kirk of the North of Scotland are strong antidisestablishmentarians'—26 letters.

A TRIBUTE TO THE PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The English Publishers' Association, in addition to its creditable collective exhibit at the Paris Exposition, sets example to the publishing trade in this country in another and more important matter. It has actually achieved what the American book trade has been vainly endeavouring since 1876 to accomplish—the rehabilitation of the retail book trade by an improvement in the method of discounts. Since the organisation of the American Book Trade Association at Put-In Bay and Niagara Falls, many half-hearted endeavours have been made in this direction, but usually with such lack of comprehensiveness or of foresight as made each movement in turn ineffective. The demoralisation in the English book trade had been perhaps even more general than in the American, for the 'thrippence in the shilling' had not even to be asked for, but was given without the asking.

Until within a few years English publishers, aside from incidental personal acquaintance, had very little to do with each other, and co-operative action was practically unknown. A few years have changed all that, and the English Publishers' Association is now a model of effective business co-operation. This organisation and its results owe much to the effective work on the part of a few men, as Mr. Murray, Mr. Longman, Mr. R. B. Marston, Mr. Frederick Macmillan, and Mr. Heinemann. To Mr. Frederick Macmillan in especial, as the pioneer and apostle of this new movement, the English trade is especially indebted.

English books are now published either as net books, or as books to be sold in the old way. On net books ⅛ discount is allowed, and it is the agreement throughout the jobbing and retail trade that they shall be sold only at that price. Most net books carry a frank statement to that effect on the paper cover. If a bookseller fails to maintain the retail price on a net book, he is debarred from further purchase of net books, but his relations are not changed to ordinary books. This has proved a very useful feature in the transition from the old system to the new. The new method meets with the hearty approval of the English trade, and there is only one known exception to it in the case of a local dealer in London who is still endeavouring to retail net books below publishing price, allowing a discount of 10 per cent. It is improbable that he will continue to be able to obtain books.

Net books now include some notably cheap books and a large range of other classes of books. The Dent books, in particular, are excellent examples of the first class, and Mr. Dent's enterprises have furnished one of the most important bridges by which it has been possible to cross from one system to another. These most attractive little volumes have given the public so much more than they formerly received for their money that buyers have been gladly willing to pay higher prices for them. But while these tasteful little books have afforded one of the best popular arguments for the new system, great progress has been made in the other direction. The Macmillan house, which has grown to one of the most important positions of leadership in the English trade, has put books of very wide range, both as to character and price, on the net basis, and no less than 836 of its publications were at last accounts on the net list.

If the American trade are to follow successfully the example of their English brethren the same large foresight will be necessary in working out plans. The public must in the first place be thought of, and books on the net basis must be put at such a price that the public will see that they are getting more, rather than less, for their money than before. That is, the net price should be at least as low as the present ruling price, discount off. This change in the retail price is rendered more necessary by the very large percentage now paid certain popular authors, based as it is on the nominal retail, and not on the actual selling price of the book. The department stores, also, as well as the retail book stores proper, are to be considered; but the fact that on many lines of goods they have been perfectly willing to maintain a real net price is evidence that they would not be unwilling to co-operate in a proper movement as to books. The time is ripe for a movement in line with the English reform, and if the reform is wisely handled it should at last be successful.—New York Publishers' Weekly.

THE BOOK DEPARTMENT OF MESSRS. GEORGE NEWNES & CO.

At the Annual Meeting of Messrs. George Newnes & Co. Ltd., the chairman, Sir George Newnes, dwelt at considerable length on the development of the firm's book department. He would like, he said, to refer specially to this department. They were developing it in so many directions, and it was assuming important proportions, so much so that it was now worth the company's while to engage travellers at home and abroad to call specially on the booksellers. They were opening new ground, and he was quite sure that next year they would have a large number of new accounts. He was speaking now especially of the booksellers' trade as apart from the newsagents' trade, and he reiterated that in the immediate future they would have a large number of new and valuable accounts opened for this department. They could make this arrangement without the great cost usually connected with travellers, because, by their co-operation with other firms in the book trade with whom they did not clash they had formed a system which could be economically and effectually worked. There were many directions in which that department could be improved, increased, and developed, and he could assure the proprietors that the matter had the close attention of the directors. He might point out one instance where the system did not result in business, but at the same time it might interest the shareholders to know that on the day of the Relief of Mafeking he wired Major-General Baden-Powell, asking him to let the George Newnes Company publish his book on the siege. He, Sir George, only received a reply on Saturday. Unhappily, the original telegram was signed, in course of transmission, 'News, London,' instead of 'Newnes, London,' but Baden-Powell had been able to surmise that 'News, London,' meant 'Newnes, London.' Accordingly the Major-General asked his brother to write the letter which he (the chairman) would read to the shareholders. Probably it was the most recent communication to arrive in London from Mafeking. It was as follows: 'I am desired by my brother, who is very busy just now organising a column to advance to the Transvaal, to acknowledge the receipt of your telegram of May 23, and to say in reply that he regrets being unable to accept your offer to publish a book, as already he has arranged to do so with another London publisher.' Major-General Baden-Powell has published several works, and probably before he went away, and before he knew of the excitement of Mafeking, he had made arrangements with his original publishers. The letter adds: 'My brother begs me to convey his best thanks for your kind congratulations.' In conclusion, the chairman said that whilst in some directions the company had been retarded in making further progress by the war, they had made up for it in other directions, and their prospects were extremely bright. The firm pays the usual dividend of 10 per cent., carrying £3,011 forward.

FAVOURITE QUOTATIONS.

An article of some literary interest in the August number of the Windsor Magazine is that contributed by F. Klickmann on 'The Favourite Quotations of Literary People.' The writers who indicate their favourite passages include Austin Dobson, Edmund Gosse, Marie Corelli, F. Marion Crawford, and Edna Lyall, S. R. Crockett, Coulson Kernahan, and Miss Braddon.

Mr. S. R. Crockett says:

'I have no favourite quotation in the sense of one above all others. But I have always felt that Scott's dying words to his children put my own aspiration—

'"For myself, my dears, I am unconscious of ever having done any man an injury, or omitted any fair opportunity of doing any man a benefit."'

Mr. Robert Barr sends some lines that have before to-day stirred up the courage and 'grit' in the heart of many a man who was beginning to think he saw nothing but 'Failure' writ large, before him:

'"One who never turned his back, but marched breast forward,
Never doubted clouds would break,
Never dreamed, though right were worsted, wrong would triumph,
Held we fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, Sleep to wake."—Robert Browning.'

Mr. Barr concludes:

'Whenever you want something helpful, you know, look up the writings of the talented R.B.s—Robert Burns, Robert Browning, Robert Buchanan, Robert Bruce, or Robert Barr.'

Miss Beatrice Harraden likewise makes a selection from the greatest of 'the talented R.B.s.' She writes:

'Your question is bewildering, as one has so many favourite lines tumbling about which cannot be called forth to order; but I am very fond of these words from Browning's "Saul":

'"The palm wine shall staunch Every wound of man's spirit in winter."

Also this, from 'The Two Gentlemen of Verona':

'"The current that with gentle murmur glides
Thou know'st, being stopped, impatiently doth rage.
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd stones."'

Mr. Clement K. Shorter says:

'I cannot hesitate to select one which, from my earliest years when I began to read German with enthusiasm, has always been ringing in my ears—

'"Im Ganzen, Guten, Wahren resolut zu leben"—
In the Whole, the Good, the True to live resolutely.'

Mr. F. Marion Crawford, who divides his life between bright America and still brighter Italy, sends a quotation in what is practically his second native language. He writes from Italy:

'I find it very hard to discover what my favourite quotation is. If there is one I prefer to another, it is, perhaps, "Risurgi e Vinci." These words are found in Dante's "Paradiso," towards the end of the XIVth Canto.'

Maxwell Gray, the author of the famous 'Silence of Dean Maitland,' writes:

'It seems to me that no one but a fool could have a favourite quotation, but I may be mistaken. At an age when people are expected to be fools, I wrote in grammar and dictionary leaves, "Vinco aut Morior," "Sans Peur et sans Reproche." Perhaps they were my favourite mottoes. Also a poem on "Dulce et decorum est pro patria mori." And one still extant on the motto of the Royal Engineers and Royal Artillery Corps—"Ubique, Quo Fas et Gloria ducunt"—a suitable motto for those who bear it. The only plan I can hit upon for discovering the favourite quotations of literary people is to read their works, which appears to be the last use to which writers are put in the present day. Matthew Arnold's favourite quotation seems to have been, "Nella sua volontade è nostra pace." So perhaps I have one, though I don't know it.'

Mr. Edmund Gosse is of the opinion that 'It must be very difficult for anyone to say what is his favourite quotation or motto; but,' he adds,

'When I came to this house four and twenty years ago I painted on the rafter in my book-room a line from Tibullus—

'"Pieridas pueri doctos et amate poetas," and it is there still. I don't know any words which express better my aim in life.'

Mr. Austin Dobson replied:

'My quotations vary with the occasion and the necessity. But I have more than once derived a melancholy consolation from the—

'"Sperate miseri, cavete felices," which Goldsmith puts on the title-page of the "Vicar of Wakefield."'

Madame Sarah Grand writes:

'There are times when I cannot say what is my favourite quotation, for no sooner have I chosen one than twenty others I like equally well occur to me; so that my favourite quotation to-day will most likely not be my favourite quotation to-morrow. The truth is, I suffer from a succession of favourite quotations. They come to me spontaneously à propos of something of public or private interest which happens to be going on at the moment, stay so long as they are applicable, and then depart. I can, therefore, only give you my favourite quotation for the time being. It came to me for my comfort while I was suffering from the first shock of the cruel and cowardly injustice done to Dreyfus, from the horror of those atrocious bull-fights at Boulogne, and from the chronic pain due to a too intimate knowledge of the tortures daily inflicted in our midst upon helpless animals by the callous vivisector. When I thought of these things, and of all the strength which seems to be expended in vain in efforts to relieve suffering, I should have despaired once for all of our vaunted humanity, had it not been for my (present) favourite quotation, which seems to say that progress marches on always imperceptibly in spite of all this—

'"For while the tired waves dimly breaking
Seem here no painful inch to gain,
Far out, by creeks and inlets waking
Comes silent flooding in the main!"'

IN MEMORIAM.

M. Jules Zeller.

The death is announced of M. Jules Zeller, Dean of the Section of General and Philosophical History at the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, Paris.

M. Zeller was born at Paris in 1820, graduated in history in 1844, and had been in turn professor of history at the Lycées of Bordeaux, Rennes, and Strasbourg. From 1854 to 1858 he had occupied with distinction the chair of history in the Faculty of Letters at Aix. The following year he delivered a course of lectures on modern history at the Sorbonne, and was appointed in 1863 professor of history at the Ecole Polytechnique in succession to M. Duruy. Sent to Strasbourg as Rector of the Academy in 1870, the siege of the city interrupted his functions, and he returned to Paris with those educational functionaries who remained loyal to France. In 1874 he was elected member of the Academy of Moral and Political Sciences, in succession to Michelet, and was appointed Inspector-General of Higher Instruction in 1878, which appointment he held until 1888.

His principal works are: 'Ulrich de Hutten, a history of the time of the Reformation,' 1849; 'Histoire de l'Invasion des Barbares,' 1852; 'Episodes dramatiques de l'histoire d'Italie,' 1855; 'Les Empereurs romaines,' 1868; 'Italie et Renaissance,' 1869; 'Histoire d'Allemagne,' 1872-1890; 'Pie IX et Victor Emmanuel'; 'Entretiens sur l'Histoire du Moyen Age,' &c. M. Zeller also wrote, in conjunction with MM. Geoffroy and Clément, the 'Rapports sur les études historiques,' an official publication undertaken in connection with the Paris Exhibition of 1867.

THE KELMSCOTT PRESS.

As most of our readers have, doubtless, noticed, the Kelmscott Press books now fetch high prices when they come into the market either in this country or in America. This fact gives particular interest to an article on William Morris's great enterprise, which appears in the current number of the Scottish Review. Without counting the two trial pages on vellum of Lord Berners' translation of Froissart's 'Chronicles,' says the author—a projected work in two volumes folio which would probably have eclipsed the 'Chaucer' in ornamentation and general importance—fifty-two works in sixty-six volumes were printed and issued at the Kelmscott Press. Initially, one hand press only was used for the books, but in November 1891 a second was bought, and early in 1895 a third, specially adapted for printing the 'Chaucer.' A trial page of the first book, 'The Story of the Glittering Plain,' was pulled on January 1, 1891—in May a copy of this page sold for £26. 10*s*.—and the first sheet printed about a month later. The volume is dated April 4, and was issued on May 8, 1891. For particulars as to type, number of copies, issue price, &c., will be found in the table appended, but it may here be noted that this is the only Kelmscott book with wash-leather ties, and that four of the vellum copies were specially bound in green vellum, three of these being given by William Morris to his friends. The text of 'The Glittering Plain,' with but small variations, was first printed in the English Illustrated Magazine. In 'Poems by the Way'—'Flores Atramenti' was the title originally intended by the author—two colours of ink, red and black, are for the first time used; and there are in existence a few copies whose vellum covers were stained at Merton, red, yellow, indigo, and dark green, this experiment, however, not proving successful. Only two of the thirteen examples of 'Poems by the Way' printed on vellum are on that procured from Rome. The third Kelmscott Press book, Mr. Wilfred Scawen Blunt's 'Poems,' is the only one whose initials are printed in red, this at the author's express wish. The fourth volume is a reprint from 'The Stones of Venice,' with a preface by Morris, of whom Ruskin said, 'Morris is beaten gold.' Some peculiarity or point of special interest attaches to almost each work issued; a few only, however, can be alluded to here. The first four books were bound in stiff vellum, and in the fifth, 'The Defence of Guenevere,' limp vellum was for the first time used. This book, again, is the only one whose title is inscribed on the back by hand. 'The Golden Legend,' set up from a transcript of Caxton's first edition in the possession of the University of Cambridge, was to have introduced the press to the public, indeed fifteen pages were in type by May 1891; but the size of the paper, at first bought in sheets 16 in. by 11 in., was found to be too small, and there was unforeseen delay in procuring the larger paper. This 'Golden Legend' contains the first woodcut title designed by Morris. The Troy type appears for the first time in 'The Recuyell,' issued on November 24, 1892. When Morris died, preparations were being made to issue Shakespeare's works and the 'Poems' of Mr. Watts-Dunton.

The writer notes that commercially the Kelmscott Press was a success. Some 18,000 copies of 53 works were sold at an aggregate sum of £50,000, or, in round figures, £8 a volume. As to the prices which collectors pay, it may be remarked that a Kelmscott Chaucer is valued at £69, and that 'The Glittering Plain,' published at £2. 2*s.*, is worth £33. 10*s.* A statistical table is given in the Scottish Review which will be of great interest and no little value to collectors.

ROSA BONHEUR:

Her Pictures and Correspondence.

There were recently sold in Paris the effects of that popular animal-painter, Rosa Bonheur, including no fewer than nine hundred paintings, the result of years of indefatigable industry, and a thousand letters almost as interesting and characteristic as her pictures.

Her letters show how kind-hearted Rosa Bonheur was to human beings and animals. She was not of those who shed tears and wring their hands, but do not act; and she actively sympathised with foreigners as well as her own country people. Of those foreigners was Ranavalo, Queen of Madagascar. Rosa Bonheur's kindness to animals was sometimes carried so far as to incommode others, and there is a notable story of a lion's cub which Rosa brought with her from Nice in a railway carriage, to the great terror of her fellow-passengers and in spite of the objections of guards and station-masters. Among her pets were dogs, birds, squirrels, and goats; she took the most conscientious care of them, and was very particular as to their food. But in 1893 she resolved not to keep so many dogs: 'They hinder me too much, and, wishing to look after them myself, they make me lose too much time in the morning.'

Rosa Bonheur interested herself in all new publications, especially in the writings of Louis Figuier and Dumas the Younger; and she was a constant reader of newspapers, which she had forwarded to her wherever she went, and was such a model subscriber that she always renewed her subscription a month in advance! But, on the other hand, she held newspaper criticism on art very cheaply.

In 1894 she was decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour, but grudged the time needed for the journey to Paris and back. 'They have again made me lose two days. May the devil fly away with all such disturbances of artistic glory! I would sooner keep a chandler's shop!'

As she grew older she became fonder of work. She shut her doors on visitors who made pilgrimages to her retreat at By, and even pretended that she was away from home when personal friends wished to visit her. 'I write to my friends and acquaintance that I am leaving for Nice, and as I greatly desire to be free at home without giving them trouble I think humbug the best means to that end!'

In 1898, when 76 years old, she rose with the sun: 'The days pass so quickly, even when one gets up at five o'clock; and it is so very hot that one must have extraordinary energy to write letters of an evening.' She was then painting pictures for Americans, whose impatience annoyed her. 'To the devil with urgent matters, to the devil with exhibitions!'

She often thought of death and spoke about it, and also of the sale of her pictures. 'When I die there will be a productive sale of my studies. People will be a little bit surprised, for I have destroyed a great many of which I was not proud.' Rosa Bonheur was not mistaken as to the productiveness of the sale, which realised £47,230.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. Edward Arnold.—'A Plain Woman's Part,' by Norley Chester. A 'Plain Woman,' who in some of her characteristics reminds us slightly of Esther Summerson in 'Bleak House,' tells the story. It principally revolves round the doings of a very beautiful girl, who in consequence of a married man's violent resolute passion for her is in danger of completely wrecking her life. But the 'Plain Woman' has also a powerful influencing personality, though she is scarcely aware of it, and in the nick of time she steps in and rescues the bird from the hands of the fowler. Then the husband goes back to the somewhat unsympathetic wife whom he has neglected, and one day fortunately discovers, when she is rather more demonstrative than usual, that he is really very fond of her indeed, and so matters end happily—for the married couple. As for the beautiful heroine she has passed through a great trial and is profuse in her expressions of gratitude to the friend that saved her, but somehow there seems to be a tinge of regret in her voice as she speaks of the past, which shows that the author has a very accurate knowledge not only of her own sex but of human nature generally, and makes the presence of many other good character-sketches in the story a circumstance by no means surprising.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith.—'People you Know: being Intimate Portraits of some of the Men and Women of To-day,' edited by Percy A. Hurd. These pithy sketches of prominent public personages are likely to be warmly appreciated by those who take an intelligent interest in the events of the day and can value skilful dissection of character. They originally appeared, we believe, in the columns of the Outlook, and were contributed to that journal for the most part by intimate friends of the subjects. It is a fortunate circumstance that the veil of anonymity hangs over their productions, or there might, we imagine, be 'excursions and alarums.' Here are a few of the opinions expressed. Of Lord Salisbury it is said that 'he is most perfectly that aristocrat among the English that England is among the nations'—a man calmly indifferent to public opinion, but powerfully animated by a desire to do his duty by his country, even at the sacrifice of his own personal tastes, which are in the direction of making nasty chemical smells in a laboratory at Hatfield. Lord Rosebery is 'essentially a man of movement'; very serious in his serious moments; who for some reason prefers to remain a solitary figure. Mr. Chamberlain stands out as the 'first-class fighting man' of politics, who seems to concentrate all the energy saved from scant physical exercise on mental activity. 'He is the man who settles things; the man who puts things through; the man who gets his way.' His gifts are of a most practical kind. It will be surprising to many people to learn of Lord Russell of Killowen that in private life he has a leaning towards sentiment, and that anyone would pronounce him 'simple, almost credulous, and not difficult to impose upon.' A good-natured tribute—the outcome, we should imagine, of a grateful remembrance of much parliamentary 'fun'—is paid to Sir William Harcourt. Mr. Justice Hawkins is spoken of as 'a singularly gay and light-hearted old man.' Of Mr. A. W. Pinero it is said that 'he never chafes under criticism, and when Mr. Bernard Shaw was more than usually himself Mr. Pinero turned with complacency to the Mining Journal.' Mr. O'Connor is 'a type and a product of his age, with the sentient Celtic mixture, and the age's currents "pull upon his heart" till sometimes, perhaps, he loses the proportion of things.' Sufficient will now be shown of the character of this little volume, which in many ways affords capital amusement.

From Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons.—'My Diocese during the War: Extracts from the Diary of the Right Rev. Arthur Hamilton Baynes, D.D., Bishop of Natal.' We have had various testimonies of the state of affairs in South Africa during these troublous times, but none so far as we can remember from a clergyman. These extracts from a Bishop's diary, made we can well understand with no thought of future publication, possess therefore exceptional interest. The very nature of its composition, so informal in its character, forms an additional merit, for as the author rightly points out, the roughest sketch which gives the local colouring sometimes conveys a truer impression than the most accurate photograph, and a note hurriedly penned will show more of the actual state of affairs than a column of carefully worded description. We have found this book very interesting reading. Here and there trivial matters are included that might well have been omitted, but the editor has evidently had a task of no ordinary difficulty in the matter of selection, and she has naturally been anxious to sacrifice as little of her material as possible. The Bishop, we notice, has some earnest and very practical words to offer on the moral aspect of the war and the necessity that some people see for a day of special fasting and prayer—words which were written before our star in South Africa was in the ascendant. 'The lessons I seem to learn,' he says, 'are not merely those which impress some people, viz. that England is so worldly and so given up to money and ease that we need the chastening of defeat, but also that England's heart is still so far true that it only needs a special call to make men show—to themselves as well as to others—how little wealth and ease weigh in the balance of their estimate of the things worth living for and worth dying for.' The book is illustrated with several effective reproductions of photographs.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'Cassell's Pictorial Guide to the Clyde.' This is a useful little book, which in small limits supplies a valuable amount of information relating to various holiday resorts on the west coast of Scotland, the best methods of reaching them, tourists' tickets, circular routes, &c. To the concisely worded letterpress, there are added a number of excellent maps and illustrations, several of which are coloured. The book revives some very pleasant recollections, and for the stranger to the Clyde and its neighbourhood should prove exceedingly helpful.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'Mafeking: a Diary of the Siege,' by Major F. D. Baillie. There is a certain rough untutored style about this work which seems singularly in keeping with the nature of its subject. The author has evidently had no leisure for refinements of diction or artistic embroidery, but expresses his views in plain vigorous language. This is as it should be, and adds immensely to the interest of the narrative. Practically the history is taken up from the commencement of October 1899, when Kruger declared war. Speedily Mafeking, as we all know, was in a state of siege, and from that time onward the gallant defenders had an exciting time of it. Major Baillie recounts the events of each day in a way that, though circumstantial, is exceedingly interesting, and the experiences of the beleaguered city are brought before us with absorbing vitality. The humours of the contest, also, are not entirely lost sight of, though without the powerful contrast of the surroundings they would probably be thought poor indeed. Here is an example: 'Colonel Baden-Powell has just received a missive from young Eloff, in which he states that he sees in a Bulawayo Chronicle that we have concerts, balls, tournaments, and cricket matches on Sundays, and it will be very agreeable to his men to come in and participate, as they find it dull outside. Colonel Baden-Powell has answered that he thinks perhaps the return match should be postponed until we have finished the present one, and that as we are now two hundred not out, and Snyman, Cronje, &c., have not been successful, he would suggest a further change of bowling.' However, these bad jokes were exceedingly useful in keeping up the spirits of the garrison, and they seem to have had no detrimental effect on the British sniping of Boers when the chance offered. The volume is profusely illustrated, and a facsimile of the special siege slip of the Mafeking Mail of Monday, December 18, 1899, which is appended, is especially interesting. From this we learn, among other particulars, that a waiter is wanted immediately at the Surrey Hotel, and that G. Lippmann, of the Market Square, has still a large stock of khaki jackets, soft shirts, flannel trousers, &c., on hand. There are also some humorous sallies at the enemy, and the dexterity with which they seek shelter. The book as a whole is very interesting.

From the same.—'War and Labour,' by Michael Anitchkow. The author expresses a fervent hope that, as the nineteenth century practically put an end to slavery, so the twentieth will see the extinction of all martial struggle between the different nations; and in this we can unreservedly join him, though it must be confessed that the outlook just now is anything but promising. Mr. Anitchkow in the first place considers some of the causes that have been put forward as likely to result in the extinction of wars. He scouts the idea that increased effectiveness in the weapons of destruction will bring about the desired consummation, and he points out that at the battle of Gravelotte, where needle-guns, Chassepot guns, quick-firing rifled guns, shells, and all the combined efforts of modern military ingenuity were used, the results, relatively, were not so disastrous as in engagements fought in the days when smooth-barrelled guns, round bullets, and flintlocks were in vogue. 'The erroneous theory,' he says, 'which affirms that war is capable of killing war, without any conscious efforts of mankind towards its discontinuation, belongs to deductions based upon the idea that the best will be evolved from the worst. This kind of theory is filled with weak, demoralising, and injurious fatalism.' Mr. Anitchkow then proceeds to an analysis of the means of suppressing wars, and considers the different suggestions made at the different peace congresses towards this end. He also refers in this connection to the memorable attitude taken up by John Bright before the Crimean War, and to that impassioned speech delivered by the Birmingham orator in the House of Commons in reply to a taunt of Lord Palmerston. After considering the subject in a variety of aspects, he finally comes to the conclusion that 'when the nations of the earth shall enter on a policy which will confirm the feeling of solidarity between primitive and independent social organisms, and when wars shall be scarcely possible, then, and then only, will the day dawn on which such institutions shall appear as will facilitate agreements between governments, settle disputes, serve as the highest display of just ideas, and incorporate universal public opinion.' This partial analysis only concerns one part of the book, of which there are three. The reader, however, must be left to consult for himself the other two. He will find that the book throughout is very interesting, though possibly here and there somewhat inflated and involved in style, and that it will afford him subject for much serious thought.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Agricultural Botany: Theoretical and Practical,' by John Percival, M.A. In this work the author has endeavoured very successfully to sift that amount of botanical knowledge which is valuable to the agriculturist from the general mass of the subject, his method being founded on the experience gained by many years' teaching and lecturing to students, practical farmers, and gardeners. He divides his work into eight sections, respectively devoted to a consideration of the General External Morphology, Internal Morphology (i.e. Anatomy), Physiology of Plants, Classification and Special Botany of Farm Crops, Weeds of the Farm, Farm Seeds, Fungi (considered chiefly in relation to some common diseases of plants), and Bacteria. The drawings of the book are mostly original, and have been made by the author from living or natural examples; they effectively add to the descriptive value of the text. The book, clearly and concisely written throughout, supplies a helpful contribution to the subject of botany, treated from the agricultural student's point of view.

From Messrs. Greening & Co.—'Rip Van Winkle, and the Legend of Sleepy Hollow,' by Washington Irving. The recent production of the play founded on this work at Her Majesty's Theatre has no doubt given rise to renewed interest in Washington Irving's story, and the publishers have been well advised in issuing a new edition of the book. To this Mr. S. J. Adair Fitzgerald contributes an introduction and some interesting particulars of the theatrical history of genial, pleasure-loving Rip. The play was by no means a success when first 'presented' in America, nor did it soon catch on in this country, although the experienced hand of Dion Boucicault was requisitioned in the work of reconstruction. But Joseph Jefferson's impersonation of the lazy, graceless hero ultimately won all hearts, and even now we have a vivid remembrance of the wonderfully mellow smile that would steal over his face, the merry mischievous eyes, and unctuous manner, so admirably contrasted with the pain-stricken accents of the old man when he has awakened from his sleep on the Kaatskill mountains.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Stars and Telescopes: a Handbook of Popular Astronomy,' by David P. Todd. Probably the first feature that will strike the reader of this volume will be its exactitude, the care with which it has been built up, and the scrupulously quoted list of authorities, sometimes extending over several pages, with which each chapter is concluded. Of the amount of labour devoted by the author to his work there can indeed be little doubt. To a large extent it is based upon the ninth edition of Lynn's 'Celestial Motions,' but in some respects—notably the matter of illustrations—the work is quite new. It will be found of great interest and service, not only by the student but by the man who has taken up the subject of astronomy as a recreation for his leisure moments.

From Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'As the Light Led,' by James Newton Baskett. A subtle refinement, influencing to a higher spiritual life, distinguishes this novel, and makes it very interesting reading. To supply an indication of the plot would be useless, because it is not so much by incident that the story chiefly excels as by the knowledge displayed of the human heart and its emotions. Mr. Baskett is one of the thoughtful school of novel-writers who is content to take his material from every-day life, and by his subdued penetrative treatment of it he is able to enlist the attention of the reader far more powerfully than if he were to discourse of sensational incidents. The characters in 'As the Light Led' do not belong, perhaps, to a very high stratum of society; they are not distinguished by any particular charm of appearance, but they are intensely human, and the experiences through which they pass, the doubts and convictions that influence their actions, are just the doubts and convictions that might sway our own movements. The story, which is of American origin, has a strong religious colouring, and is largely concerned with the efforts of a young man to lead a better, more earnest form of life.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'The Autobiography of a Charwoman,' as chronicled by Annie Wakeman. There is an underlying flavour of grim reality in these life details of a humble charwoman that is certain to awaken the sympathetic interest of all readers who have mingled with the poor and know something of their ways and peculiarities of thought. To such a one the thorough womanliness of this poor charwoman's efforts to keep straight, her steady devotion to an ideal however roughly defined, will more often inspire a feeling of compassion than incite to ready laughter at the originality of the day-servant's utterances. The volume indeed is a curious mixture of widely diverging elements, and for our own part we are inclined to resent the superstructure of artificiality which the 'chronicler' has thought it necessary to raise on the foundation of truth; and the touches of humour that are introduced somehow jar on the feelings of sympathy which these revelations of the inner life of the poor woman evoke. But of course all tastes are not alike, and it was necessary to edit the autobiography, adapting it to the popular fancy, and Miss Wakeman, [illegible] has done her work well. She has evidently had an exceedingly good subject to work upon, and has performed her task with vivacity and skill. Poor Sally's story would have been painful indeed in its bare, unvarnished state

From Marshall Brothers.—'Calls to Holiness,' by the Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Prebendary of St. Paul's. The sermons composing this volume were originally delivered extemporaneously, and for this reason, though wanting, may be, in literary distinction, they possess an earnestness and depth of feeling not always noticeable in more elaborately prepared addresses. Attention to style is all very well, and generally speaking very necessary, but it is apt if too critically insisted upon to obscure anything like heartfelt expression of opinion, and in no form of literature is this more apparent than sermons—the homely, outspoken address, in our opinion, being far more valuable towards the winning of souls than all the carefully worded, closely reasoned theological productions that ever were written. And so it comes that Mr. Webb-Peploe's words, issued direct from the heart without previous preparation of any kind, have a charm that will commend them to the favourable attention of all religious readers.

From Mr. John Milne.—'An Absent-minded War: being some Reflections on our Reverses and the Causes which have led to them,' by a British Officer. Opinions will always vary, and it is easy probably enough for those occupying a subordinate position to criticise with apparently telling effect the military dispositions of their superiors. Placed in the same position themselves, with all the weight of increased responsibility, they would no doubt find the correct path scarcely so clear to them. Of course, we are far from saying that the author of this volume is not actuated by the best of motives and thoroughly believes in the justice of what he alleges; but on the other hand we have to remember that he speaks after the event, when what at one time was obscure is now made quite clear. Much of his criticism is no doubt thoroughly justified, but it should at least be tempered with candour. British officers may make mistakes in more ways than one.

From Mr. Frank Murray, Nottingham (London: Simpkin, Marshall & Co.).—'Notes on Printers and Booksellers, with a Chapter on Chap Books,' by Charles Gerring. We must confess to a slight feeling of disappointment in this book, for, though it is good enough of its kind, we had expected something more original and exhaustive. The author divides his work into three parts. In the first he treats of printers, tracing the growth of the trade from its earliest beginnings under Gutenberg, Caxton, William Machlinia and John Letton, Wynkyn de Worde, Aldus Manutius, John Rastell, and others to the present day. In this section he has much to say about the productions of the Kelmscott Press, the Vale Press of Messrs. Hacon & Ricketts, and the Guild of Handicraft (Mr. Ashbee). In each of these he sees reason for the warmest praise. He also speaks favourably of the dainty volumes issued by the Rev. C. H. Daniel in the seventies. Part II. of the work is mainly devoted to short records of the principal booksellers, but the list is by no means complete, seeing that such names as the Cornishes, Pickering & Chatto, Hatchards, J. Pearson & Co., and others are omitted. However, for this an apology is made; the work would have been too ponderous had all been included. Portraits of several of the principal booksellers are also included. A section on chap books forms the concluding portion of Mr. Gerring's work. This supplies a general history of the subject, and is illustrated with some twenty-four reproductions of the different covers. It furnishes an interesting account of the growth and characteristics of the chap book, and is certain to be read with much favour. The whole book, we may say, will be more likely to attract attention from the nature of the subject than from any depth or particular originality displayed in the treatment, but that it will attract such attention we are very sure.

From Mr. John Murray.—'The Compleat Bachelor,' by Oliver Onions. This, as the first volume of a new series of fiction which the publisher is projecting, is capital. We have our doubts whether the book can exactly be termed 'popular' except in the sense of price, for the delicate humour of these sketches will scarcely be appreciated by the crowd, but by more cultivated readers of quick perception they are sure to be warmly welcomed. The bachelor in question is a man of middle age who has closely studied his fellow men—and women—and can take great pleasure in causing the puppets around him to perform amusing antics by working on their own individual foibles. Not by any means an ill-natured man, but one who likes, with almost Puck-like mischievousness, to set two people on wrong tracks and then delightedly watch the result. His description, for instance, of his young sister's courtship, and the efforts of the couple to shake off his undesired company at a garden party—the wily moves of the lover and the dexterous parries of the older man—is most delightfully told, and a further amusing situation is described when he goes to the opera as the third spoke in the wheel, and the amorous couple are eventually reduced to the idiotic condition of clasping their hands across his knees, because he will insist with the most charming good temper in sitting between them. Of course young readers will care nothing about this, but to the man who knows his world it is delicious. We are afraid the 'compleat bachelor' in actual life would be very much disliked by the majority of people, but on the whole might be disposed to waive the social world's animosity (only shown behind his back) by the amusement derived from it. In the present instance he eventually falls a prey to the matrimonial noose himself. Something should, no doubt, be said about the binding and printing of this new series. Both, as evidenced in the first issue, are admirable, though we can scarcely see the advantage of overlapping the edges like the binding of some prayer-books. There is certainly little that is Biblical in this volume.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'The Father Confessor: Stories of Death and Danger,' by Dora Sigerson Shorter. Appearances would seem to indicate that the present generation of readers has rather a liking for stories of the unsubstantial type with a considerable flavour of uncanny, not to say morbid, suggestiveness thrown in; and, if this is so, Mrs. Clement Shorter's volume should exactly hit the popular taste. 'The Father Confessor' is the story of a man who is deeply attached to a girl, warns her against another and more successful rival, and afterwards in his character of priest listens to the dying confession of the husband who has murdered her; in the following narrative a grey, middle-aged man shows how courage is the most valuable of all attributes in winning a woman's affection, being infinitely superior to good looks and sordid pelf (his own relation of ignoble cowardice would seem to bear out his contention, but we have our own opinion on the question of money's influence); and the remaining contents are of similar kind. The stories are light and flimsy, but it is possible, no doubt, for a generation of fanciful novel-readers, experienced in this sort of exercise, to evolve many deep and underlying truths from them.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'For Right and England: a Story of the South African War,' by Hume Nisbet. The author has attempted a very difficult task—to write a story into which real characters and events of the war shall be interwoven. We do not say it is by any means an impossible task, but it is at least one for which Mr. Hume Nisbet is by fervour of temperament not exactly fitted. He shows his unsuitability at once by opening with a thoroughly patriotic preface, in which he apparently forgets his character of novelist, and plunges madly into a denunciation of Gladstone and corresponding laudation of Salisbury and Chamberlain. After this exhibition of indiscretion we are quite prepared for what follows. Kruger in the story is depicted in the strongest, most violent colours, and ever and anon the author, overcome by the enthusiasm of his convictions, quits the main path of his narrative, and, apparently quite forgetful of the mission upon which he started, plunges wildly into a description of the actual course of the campaign, with his own encouraging criticisms of the same. Far be it from us to dispute the truth of Mr. Nisbet's eulogiums in the matter of masterly generalship, strategic movements, British bravery, &c.; all we would point out is that they are out of place in a novel. But his book has at least this good quality, that it is bright and vigorous, and in the present dearth of really good, carefully thought-out fiction, these are points not likely to be despised.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

LOW'S POPULAR TWO-SHILLING SERIES

These Books by MISS ALCOTT, MRS. HARRIET BEECHER STOWE, MRS. WHITNEY, and others, are well adapted for Girls for School Prizes, &c.

Small crown 8vo. cloth gilt, 2s.

Like the 'Standard Books for Boys,' for the earlier issues of this series there was a very large demand. Their reception has quite justified the high encomiums passed upon them by the Press generally. Altogether this series is one of the best possible selections from the various works of the distinguished Authors. It comprises books which the SATURDAY REVIEW describes as 'perhaps THE BEST OF THEIR KIND for the present generation.'

LATEST ADDITIONS

1. THE PREACHER'S DAUGHTER: a Domestic Romance. By AMELIA E. BARR.
2. BERNICIA. By AMELIA E. BARR.
3. THE FLOWER OF GALA WATER, and other Stories. By AMELIA E. BARR. Illustrated.
4. COMIC TRAGEDIES. Written by 'Jo' and 'Meg,' and Acted by the 'Little Women.' By LOUISA M. ALCOTT.
5. BEN-HUR: a Tale of the Christ. By LEW WALLACE.

THE BEST CHILDREN'S

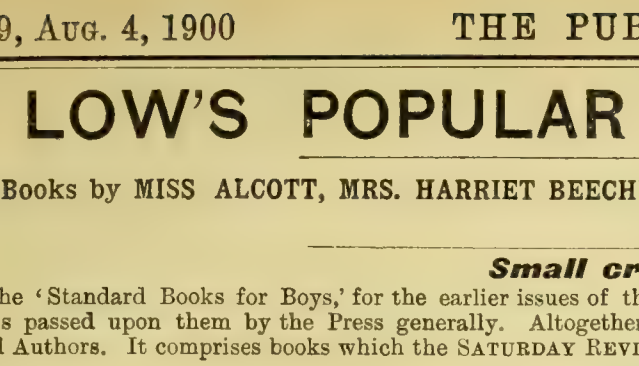
Chromo Presentation Books of the Season

A SPLENDID SERIES.

Size, royal 4to. (or 12½×9½ inches), handsomely bound in stiff picture boards. Cloth backs.

Price 3s. 6d. each.

Ten Little Boer Boys. A new version of an old tale. One of the smartest and most original Children's Books ever published. The verses are by 'NORMAN,' and are most cleverly and ably illustrated by exceedingly humorous sketches by A. S. FORREST. There is also music to each verse.



Seven little Boer boys,
Full of naughty tricks,
One abused the white flag,
And then there were six.

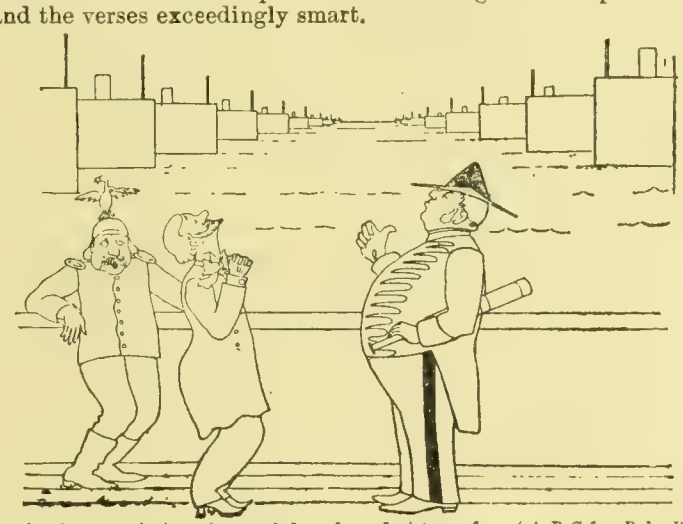
The Pickletons. Told and Drawn by INGLES RHODE. This exceedingly clever and amusingly-illustrated Story consists of twenty-four pages of Coloured Illustrations, which are masterpieces of Mr. INGLES RHODE'S art and humour.

The Gimcrack Jingle Alphabet. Drawn by INGLES RHODE, Author and Artist of 'The Pickletons.' Eminent art critics are of opinion that the Drawings in this book surpass even those of 'The Pickletons.'

A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'Gimcrack Jingle Alphabet.'

A very small boy with a yacht,
Said, 'Carry that thing I will not!'
See Jeames behind with the toy,
Whilst that rude little boy
In derision is shouting 'Wot rot!'

A B C for Baby Patriots. By Mrs. ERNEST AMES. This Alphabet is composed of amusing topical verses, ably illustrated by full-page Coloured Plates. These are as vivid in their colouring as they are most humorous in conception. The drawings are exceptionally clever and the verses exceedingly smart.



A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

N is the Navy
We keep at Spithead,
It 's a sight that makes foreigners
Wish they were dead.

Pictures for Little Englanders: a Companion Book to Mrs. AMES' 'A B C for Baby Patriots.' Verses by FRANK GREEN, and Pictures by A. S. FORREST. This book consists of amusing topical verses illustrated in a style which is Mr. FORREST'S own. It makes a splendid companion book to 'A B C for Baby Patriots.'

A reduction in one printing of one of the coloured pictures from 'Pictures for Little Englanders.'

THE CAPE TO CAIRO RAILWAY.
In building railways, Johnny Bull
Is anything but a tyro;
He now is seeking to connect
The Cape of Good Hope to Cairo.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE AUTUMN EDUCATIONAL NUMBER

OF THE

WILL BE ISSUED NEXT WEEK

Every endeavour will be made to make it of interest to the Scholastic World and of practical value to the Trade, and in every possible way to bring it under the notice of those engaged in tuition. Its value as an Advertising Medium is, therefore, very great.

The ordinary circulation will be largely increased, and, according to our custom of previous years, copies will be forwarded free by post to all the principal Colleges and Schools at Home and Abroad.

Advertisements should be sent in at once addressed to the Manager, PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, E.C.

CHINA AND THE PRESENT CRISIS

WITH NOTES ON A VISIT TO JAPAN AND KOREA.

By JOSEPH WALTON, M.P.

'The student of the Far Eastern question cannot fail to glean many useful and instructive hints, especially from the conversations the author had with Oriental statesmen and European diplomatists.'—TIMES.

'A valuable account of China and the Chinese which all who wish to make up their minds about a very puzzling situation would do well to study for themselves. The map is extremely clear and good. Mr. Walton could scarcely have chosen a more appropriate season for issuing the account of his recent travels in the Far East.'—STANDARD.

EUROPEAN SETTLEMENTS IN THE FAR EAST:

The TIMES says:—'A very useful handbook. . . . It is a carefully compiled collection of all the best and most recent information with regard to the "Treaty Ports" of China and Japan and the chief centres of trade and commerce in the British, Russian, French, Dutch, American, and other colonies and dependencies in the Far East. Each section is prefaced with a short introduction giving an outline of the historical development, political institutions, and administrative system of the country or colony with which it deals. This is followed by a full description of every settlement, often accompanied by an illustration, with the latest statistics as to population, local industries, import and export trade, and shipping. It is an excellent work of reference, and its publication at the present moment is specially opportune.'

THE COLOMBIAN and VENEZUELAN REPUBLICS.

With Notes on Other Parts of Central and South America. By WILLIAM L. SCRUGGS, late Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the United States to Colombia and to Venezuela. With 3 Maps and 10 Full-page Illustrations. Demy 8vo. cloth, gilt top, 12*s.* 6*d.* net.

'A week or two before the death of Mr. R. D. Blackmore, Messrs. Sampson Low arranged with him to bring out a new edition of "Lorna Doone"—an arrangement, as it turned out, which terminated, they tell us, "that most friendly and cordial intercourse which his publishers had with him for over thirty years." That edition has just been issued, and is in singularly attractive form. "Lorna Doone" is a long story—here it extends to 687 pages—and the type is large, but by the use of the India paper the volume is of very handy size, and is admirably suited for the pocket. It can be had in either cloth or leather binding. The reprinting opposite the title-page of the verses by the late novelist's old friend, Mr. Arthur Manby, which appeared in the Athenæum at the time of Mr. Blackmore's death, was a very happy idea.'

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.,

August 10, 1900.

Is the six-shilling novel doomed to follow the three-volume novel into speedy oblivion? We do not think so. At the same time it is natural that enterprising publishers should make experiments in various directions and at various prices. Mr. Murray, for example, has just started a half-crown series which is likely to be a conspicuous success because the matter is good and the style of production attractive. But it is noticeable that Mr. Murray does not pretend to give a six-shilling article for two-and-six. The novel of orthodox length he publishes at the orthodox figure, and his list shows that he is making a feature of the six-shilling story. As with Mr. Murray, so with others: it is recognised that, in the interest of all concerned, author, publisher, bookseller, the ordinary figure for the novel of average length is best, at least for the time being. According to the Academy, however, 'a publisher whose reputation for successful fiction is second to none in London said the other day he was ready to try any experiment for a change, even to the length of issuing novels at thirty-one-and-six; and he was not talking facetiously.' Another publisher is reported to have said it would be a good thing to return to the thirty-one-and-six figure. When it was suggested to him that such a change would destroy his business in novels so issued he replied: 'It would, and I should be delighted to have my business in certain novels destroyed absolutely. You must understand,' he explained, 'that no one has any fault to find with the present price of novels which sell well. It is the work of the new author, and of the author with a reputation but no circulation, that causes the trouble and dissatisfaction. Such work, take it all round, results in loss to the seller.'

Here, remarks the Academy, undoubtedly was a truth. And, to be sure, a successful novel is successful irrespective of price. But the value of our contemporary's opinion on the question in general may be inferred from the circumstance that it seems to think the ordinary profit of a bookseller on a six-shilling novel is fourpence. It is, however, nearer the mark when it tells of the 'extraordinary competition among publishers for successful and partially successful authors.' How is success or partial success to be estimated? After this fashion: 'Let a man,' we are told, 'write a novel which sells only two thousand copies, and he will find half a dozen firms anxious to accept all risks and pay him from £75 to £100 on account of royalties upon delivery of the MS. of his next novel. Even if a novel sells but a thousand copies, thus clearing its first edition, the author may in future choose his publisher from several, and obtain from £30 to £50 in advance on his next MS.' To make them generally accurate these statements require considerable modification and qualification; but one point is correctly stated, namely, that the competition in publishing is keen, and the fact that this is so would in itself be enough to show the absurdity, absolute and unqualified, of many of Sir Walter Besant's charges against publishers. It also makes another thing clear, that if a young writer produces a book worth publishing he will have no difficulty whatever in getting it accepted.

Whether or not the six-shilling novel will shortly disappear is of course another question. Several publishers, we know, regret the disappearance of the three-volume novel; but it has gone, and for ourselves we do not think there is the remotest chance of a return to that mode of publication. The tendencies, indeed, are all in the other direction; and we should not be at all surprised to find the ordinary six-shilling novel issued at half-a-crown or less. One or two experiments in extreme cheapness have already been made, with what measure of success we are not in a position to state. The vogue of the sixpenny edition indicates what we may come to in the matter of price. On the other hand, it should be remembered that the once popular 'yellow back' finds little favour with readers of to-day, even when print and paper are good and the excellence of the matter beyond question. The one undeniable fact at present is that the six-shilling novel holds the field, and in many cases holds it to the great advantage of the author. When a publisher can go to press with a first edition of 75,000 copies of a new six-shilling novel, and is tolerably certain of selling it, the suitability of the six-shilling form seems clear. Under the old system the return which such a first issue represents would have been impossible.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Mr. Murray has been chosen one of the Honorary Presidents of the Fourth International Congress of Publishers by the Leipzig Committee of Organisation. The Congress will be held at Leipzig from 9th to 12th June, 1901. For the reception of several hundred publishers of all civilised nations, Leipzig, the metropolis of the German, Austrian, and Swiss book-trade, is making preparations. In seven sessions the Congress will discuss the rights and interests of authors and publishers, as well as technical questions of the book, art, and music trades to be settled from an international point of view. The President will be Mr. Albert Brockhaus, Leipzig; and the Foreign Honorary Presidents, in addition to Mr. Murray, London, Messrs. Fouret, Hachette, Paris, and Bruylant, Brussels, have been chosen.

To Captain A. T. Mahan the Royal United Service has awarded the Chesney gold medal—the first awarded—for 'Works bearing upon the Welfare of the Empire,' the works specified being 'The Influence of Sea Power upon History,' 'The Influence of Sea Power on the French Revolution and Empire,' and 'The Life of Nelson.'

We learn that the Netherlands South African Railway Company have commenced an action for libel against Mr. FitzPatrick on account of certain statements contained in his volume, 'The Transvaal from Within,' and also against Mr. William Heinemann, the publisher.

Mr. John Murray's new periodical The Monthly Review, which is to be edited by Mr. Henry Newbolt, promises well. In the general choice of its subjects it will be very catholic. Religion, ethics, literature, art, science, history, politics, international relations, social questions, naval and military matters, pastimes and amusements will be treated in its pages. The policy of great names will not be followed to the exclusion of the unknown author; every article will be taken fairly on its merits. Noticeable features of the new review will be a serial story, original poetry, and criticism on current literature. Illustrations, consisting of reproductions, drawings, maps and plans of all kinds, will be given; but it is apparently not intended to make a special feature of the artistic embellishments, and they will only be introduced where it is necessary to explain and elucidate the text, to which they will always be subservient. The permanent editorial department will consist each month of articles on topics of current interest under the direct supervision of the editor, and through this channel personal relation with the reader will be established. The first number—that for October—will appear on September 19, but subsequent issues will be published as nearly as may be on the 25th of each month.

In answering Sir Richard Jebb, who asked in the House of Commons on Monday if Her Majesty's Government would consider the expediency of introducing legislation on the lines of the Copyright Bill twice passed by the House of Lords, Mr. A. J. Balfour said he was very reluctant to give a pledge at the end of a Session about what would fall on another Session, and that reluctance increased in this case as the Government had no information at present as to how a Bill which so greatly affected the Colonies was viewed in the Colonies. It would be an easy matter to obtain the views of the Colonies.

An illustrated édition de luxe of 'Hans Christian Andersen's Fairy Tales' has been in course of preparation for some years in Denmark, practically under the auspices of the Danish Government. It has recently begun to appear in parts in Denmark, and will be completed by Christmas. It will be published in Copenhagen, and translations will appear simultaneously in French, German, Swedish, Russian, and Czech. An English translation by Mr. Brækstad will be published in this country by Mr. Heinemann, and in America by the Century Co. The work will be in two large volumes. The illustrations, by the Danish artist Hans Tegnier, have at an enormous expense been engraved on wood.

The speculations roused by the appeal in the case of Walter v. Lane have been disposed of by the judgment of the House of Lords, which was delivered on Monday by the Lord Chancellor, and is reported by us on another page. The facts are familiar, and need not be recapitulated. But it may be said that the case illustrates more pertinently than any other recent case the intricacies and surprises of the law of copyright. When the volume of 'Appreciations and Addresses' by Lord Rosebery was published last year by Mr. John Lane, the proprietors of the Times sought an injunction under the Copyright Act of 1842 to restrain him from infringing their rights, that is to say, from circulating the book. That injunction Mr. Justice North granted. Mr. Lane appealed, and the Court of Appeal reversed the original decision. The Times then carried the case to the House of Lords, and that august body has restored Mr. Justice North's judgment. Even in the end the judgment was not absolutely unanimous, for Lord Robertson dissented. But the law as at present interpreted by the highest authority in the land is that a reporter is entitled to copyright in his reports of speeches. The reasons for this decision are given explicitly by the Lord Chancellor.

It is not for the lay mind to question the interpretation, though, as we have said, the history of the case shows that where learned doctors differ so widely there is at least room for divergence of opinion. A precedent, if not a principle of importance, has been established, and points of no little moment are raised. Two men, not collaborators, cannot have copyright in the same literary production. An orator and the stenographer who takes down his speech are not in any sense collaborators. If the reporter has copyright in the report which may be assumed to be verbatim, what becomes of the rights of the original author? Then again, if within the meaning of the Act a reporter is, as the Lord Chancellor states, the author of the report of any speech he takes down and has printed, is it conceivable that the shorthand reporter who takes down judgments in a court of law is the 'author' of those judgments? The Lord Chancellor confessed he could not understand certain explanations of the Court of Appeal. The plain man may well be puzzled by the entire law of copyright as illustrated in the case under consideration. The fact is, of course, that fresh copyright legislation is urgently needed, and it must be regarded as a misfortune that the House of Commons dropped the Copyright Bill passed by the House of Lords.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

One of the most interesting, at least from a typographical standpoint, of the many attractive pavilions at the Paris Exhibition is that representative of the empire of Corea. The press is represented by copies of the eight daily papers published in Corea. One of these, the Seoul Gazette, was founded as far back as 1567, and is consequently sixty years older than the first French newspaper. Printing was known in Corea from the ninth century. The letters were engraved on blocks of wood, a specimen of which is shown in the Pavilion. It was not until the fourteenth century that movable copper types were used. Some works printed from such types are exhibited in the Pavilion. The earliest is the 'Treatise of the Patriarchs,' printed in 1317, more than a century prior to the use of movable type by Gutenberg!

At the Palais de l'Enseignement, forming part of the great Exhibition in the Champ de Mars, and in the department called Section rétrospective de la Librairie, may be seen a number of the revolutionary journal, 'Ami du Peuple,' dated September 13, 1792, on which are blood stains; and in another part of the Exhibition, the pavilion of the city of Paris, is on view another number of the same paper for August 13, 1792, also stained with blood. The blood is that of Marat, who at the moment of his death by the dagger of Charlotte Corday was consulting a file of his infamous journal. These blood-sprinkled numbers fell to the ground near to the bath, where his admirers found them and took them as relics. Hence it happens that two of these numbers are now to be seen at the Paris Exhibition.

The late Guillaume Guizot (son of the distinguished statesman and orator, François Guizot, author of 'Histoire de la Révolution en Angleterre'), having edited an edition of 'Montaigne's Essays,' had intended writing a book about Michel de Montaigne, but died ere he could complete his task. M. Auguste Salles has collected and edited the fragments left by their author, and M. Émile Faguet has supplied a preface to the volume, which Librairie Hachette publishes as 'Montaigne: Études et Fragments,' par Guillaume Guizot. Of his object in writing Guizot says: 'I candidly acknowledge my intention. I admire Montaigne very much, but am persuaded that, upon the whole, we have formed too high and too good an opinion of him. Montaigne amuses, interests, charms, seduces, astonishes me, and I thoroughly admire him; but, thank God, I do not love him, and I maintain that he is a perfect sample of a certain kind of men who, albeit amiable, are not at all worthy of being loved.' His opinion of the Essays may be briefly stated in his own words: 'I may frankly call the Essays the Introduction to a "Worldly Life." Montaigne is the St. François de Sales of profane and mean minds.'

Professor Martin Hartmann, who has prepared the specimen part of a projected encyclopædia of Islam, dealing with the Arabian press in general, makes the following statement concerning it: The press flourishes most in Egypt where there is no censorship to be feared, as in Turkey. In Cairo there is even a press bureau, founded by Baron Malortie, who died last year, by which the reports to the Government are prepared. Hartmann registers 198 newspapers, which, as he himself remarks, is the more strange because the great mass of the people cannot read. There are conservative, moderate, and progressive, as well as Moslem, Koptic, and Syriac journals. The Pan-Islamic, Osmanic, nationalist, and autonomist organs are opposed to the papers subsidised by England and France. The former are chiefly engaged in combating the intrusion of Christians into journalism. When the Government wishes to render a newspaper innocuous it simply gives a pension to the editor, who thereupon discontinues it (!).

The interesting and instructive letters addressed to Talleyrand by Mirabeau, when acting as secret agent of France at the court of Berlin from July 1786 to January 1787, have not hitherto appeared in their entirety; although an imperfect edition of 20,000 copies, which he caused to be published anonymously on his return to France, was speedily sold in spite of the efforts of the police to suppress it. M. Henri Welschinger has now edited and prefaced a faithful reprint from the originals contained in the French Foreign Office, adding to them various unpublished letters of Talleyrand and Mirabeau, and some despatches of the French ambassador at Berlin, Comte d'Esterno, which serve to supplement and elucidate the correspondence. The whole forms an octavo volume, entitled 'La Mission Secrète de Mirabeau à Berlin (1786–1787),' and is published by E. Plon, Nourrit & Co.

A POPULAR NOVELIST.

Among the many popular writers of to-day none has a more steadfast circle of readers than Mr. F. Marion Crawford, whose books are published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co. He has never, so far as we know, been boomed. Yet of his last novel some 80,000 copies have been sold. Mr. Crawford has had an interesting and romantic career. The youngest of four children, he was born in Italy in 1854. When twelve years old he was sent to America to be educated. Subsequently he studied in England and in Germany, and at the University of Rome. Becoming interested in Oriental languages, he went to India to increase his knowledge of Sanskrit, which he had studied as a youth. Turning to journalism he got an engagement on the Allahabad Indian Herald, of which he became the editor. He learned a great deal about Buddhism and other Oriental lore, and at Simla he met the original of Mr. Isaacs. Mr. Crawford says that his work on the Herald was the hardest he ever did. Returning to Italy in 1880, he again found himself idle, and presently visited America. He entered Harvard as a special student, taking a course in Sanskrit. During this time he wrote numerous book reviews and articles on philosophical themes. On May 5, 1882, his uncle, Mr. Samuel Ward, asked him to dinner at a New York club. Mr. Crawford related some of his Indian experiences, which Mr. Ward urged him to weave into the form of a story. The result was the well-known novel, 'Mr. Isaacs.' At the request of Mr. T. B. Aldrich, then editor of the magazine, he wrote 'A Roman Singer' for the Atlantic Monthly. Since then his other stories have followed in quick succession, most of them written very rapidly. 'Marzio's Crucifix,' we learn from an American biographer, was produced in ten days, and 'A Tale of a Lonely Parish' in twenty-four days, at the rate of a chapter of about five thousand words a day. He was married to a daughter of General Berdan in the year 1884, in Constantinople, and in 1885 went back to Italy, to Sorrento, where he has a villa, and where he has lived ever since, save for his visits to America.

Mr. Crawford, remarks the critic above referred to, has the balance completely in his favour when one looks over the long list of stories from his pen which have become famous. His 'Saracinesca,' the scene of which is laid in Rome in the last days of the Pope's temporal power; 'Sant' Ilario,' a sequel to 'Saracinesca,' also taken from Roman life, the plot involving an attempt by an audacious forgery to rob the Saracinesca family of land and titles; and 'Don Orsino,' another story in this series, showing the development of the third generation of the Saracinesca family, are really the best-known and most widely read of all his writings; but, besides the several books we have mentioned one must not overlook 'A Roman Singer,' an exquisite story, the scene of which is laid also in Rome, and is the story of the love affair of a young tenor, told by his maestro, who is divided between fear lest the love affair ruin the tenor's art and his sympathy with the young couple. Neither shall we forget 'Greifenstein,' a tragic story of the Swabian Black Forest.

COPYRIGHT IN SPEECHES.

DECISION IN THE TIMES CASE.

On Monday the House of Lords gave its decision in the appeal of 'Walter v. Lane.' Particulars of the case have already appeared in these columns, but the following summary may be useful to enable our readers to appreciate the final judgment. In June 1899, the respondent, Mr. John Lane, the well-known publisher, issued a book entitled 'Appreciations and Addresses by Lord Rosebery,' which, it was admitted, contained verbatim, or nearly verbatim, copies of the reports of the speeches published in the Times. Lord Rosebery had never claimed, and did not claim, the copyright in any of the speeches. On June 30, 1899, the appellants, Mr. Arthur F. Walter and Mr. Godfrey Walter, on behalf of the proprietors of the Times, commenced an action in the Chancery Division against the respondents, claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the copyright in the reports published in the Times, and an injunction to restrain the respondent from infringing such copyright. During the proceedings the respondent admitted that if the reporters by whom the reports were composed were the authors of them, within the meaning of the Act, the proprietors of the Times were entitled to the copyright therein. He, however, alleged that the reporter was not the author or composer of the matter in which he claimed copyright within the meaning of the Copyright Act, 1842. Mr. Justice North decided in favour of the contention of the appellants, holding that a speech and the report of a speech were two different and distinct things, and that there might be copyright for the reporter in his report of a speech even as against the orator. The Court of Appeal, however, reversed this decision, being of opinion that the reporter was not an author within the meaning of the Copyright Acts, and that, in the case of verbatim reports, he added nothing to the words already published which gave him a copyright in his report. Hence the present appeal, by which the appellants sought to have the judgment of Mr. Justice North restored. In giving the judgment of the House of Lords the Lord Chancellor said :—

I should very much regret if I were compelled to come to the conclusion that the letter of the law permitted one man to make profit and to appropriate to himself the labour, skill, and capital of another. And it is not denied that in this case the defendant seeks to appropriate to herself what has been produced by the skill, labour, and capital of others. In the view I take of this case, I think the law is strong enough to restrain what, to my mind, would be a grievous injustice. The Copyright Act confers what it calls 'Copyright,' which means the right to multiply copies which it confers on the authors of the books first published in this country. That the publication in question, namely, 'Reports of Lord Rosebery's Speeches,' are simply copies of what was first printed in the Times is not denied. And further, it has not been, and cannot be, denied that they were originally, as in the Times, a sheet or sheets of letterpress, and came within the definition of the Act as a book. The speeches, therefore, and the sheets of letterpress in which they were contained, were books first published in this country, and I confess, upon looking at the definition and the right conferred, I am wholly unable to discover why they are not protected by the statute from being pirated by unauthorised persons.

I [illegible] the conclusion that the Court of Appeal [illegible] to [illegible] Acts. [illegible] to understand why the labour of reproducing spoken [illegible] book does not make the person who has so acted as [illegible] particular street.

[illegible] the use of the word 'author,' and I cannot help thinking that some confusion has been created between two very different things. One, the proprietary right of every man in his own literary composition, and the other the copyright, that is to say the exclusive privilege of making copies created by the Statute. The question is solely whether this book (to use the language of the Statute), printed and published and existing as a book for the first time, can be copied by some one else than the producer of it by those who have not produced it themselves, but have simply copied that which others have laboured to create by their own skill and expenditure.

It is admitted apparently by the Court of Appeal (and, indeed, insisted on as part of the reasons for their judgment) that the owner of an unpublished manuscript, although not the author of it, acquires copyright in it by first publishing it. And I observe that it is said Lord Rosebery had no copyright in his speech, and although he could have acquired copyright in it by putting it into writing and printing and publishing it, he did not do so. Here again the implied proposition is that the only person who could gain copyright in his speech is the person who spoke it, and that the word 'original' must by construction be read into the Statute, that the true analogy is the true and first inventor of the Patent Laws. I think the analogy is a false one. But if it were strictly pursued I think it would not be favourable to the defendant. An importer of a foreign invention is, for the purpose of the Patent Laws, an inventor, and, as Lord Brougham said, there were two species of public benefactors—the one, 'those who benefit the public by their ingenuity, industry, and science, and invention and personal capability; the other, those who benefit the public without any ingenuity or invention of their own by the appropriation of the results of foreign inventions. Now the latter is a benefit to the public incontestably, and therefore they render themselves entitled to be put upon somewhat if not entirely the same footing as inventors.'

I might paraphrase Lord Brougham's language by asking whether those who preserve the memory of spoken words which are assumed to be of value to the public are not entitled to the analogous merit which Lord Brougham attributes to the importer of foreign inventions? I have not insisted upon the skill and accuracy of those who produce in writing or print spoken words, it is not because I think the less of those qualities, but because, as I have endeavoured to point out, neither the one nor the other are conditions precedent to the right created by the Statute. That right, in my view, is given by the Statute to the first producer of a book, whether that book be wise or foolish, accurate or inaccurate, of literary merit or of no merit whatever.

It is said that in the view I have suggested there would be as many copyrights as reporters. I don't see the difficulty. Each reporter is entitled to report, and each undoubtedly would have a copyright in his own published report. But where is the difficulty? Suppose a favourite view—a dozen artists take independently their own representation of it. Is there any reason why each should not have his own copyright in the photograph where each photograph is taken from the same point, and in the same state of the light, would be identical in all respects. There is, of course, no copyright in the view itself, but in the supposed picture or photo there is. It may be there is a confusion of thought between the difficulty of proof of the piracy and the existence of piracy. There, as I have said before, no such difficulty arises, since it is admitted that the report of these speeches is not the result of independent labour, but is taken from the Times. I think the judgment of Mr. Justice North was right, and that the only answer sought to be given to it by the Court of Appeal was the restricted use of the word 'author' with which I have endeavoured to deal. I, therefore, move your lordships that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed with costs, and the judgment of Mr. Justice North restored.

Lords Davey, James, and Brampton concurred in the view taken by the Lord Chancellor, and read judgments in favour of the appellants, but Lord Robertson was of the same opinion as the Court of Appeal.

The [illegible] to restrain the publication was made perpetual, and the respondents ordered to pay costs.

FABLES ABOUT BOOKS.

'Comin' Thro' the Rye' was a fine title for a novel, remarks a contemporary reviewer. The story is now about twenty-five years old. It has been widely read. Of late its popularity is attested by the sixpenny editions. Did the story bring, say, not a fortune, but moderate compensation to its author? Miss Mathers, we are told, sold it originally to Messrs. Bentley for thirty-five guineas, and, it is added, a bird in the hand was probably worth more to the writer then than two in the bush. She was glad enough to accept a lump sum, with no idea of future royalties. The following story told of Miss Mathers in connection with this particular novel is not vouched for: There was a dinner, when Miss Mathers was present. Some entirely mercenary and inquisitive person said to the lady: 'We understand that you have received £30,000 for your "Comin' Thro' the Rye."' 'Just take off the last three noughts,' was her reply.

How many copies of the romance have been sold or distributed no one will ever know. That is the secret of the publishers. It should, however, be borne in mind that for the one lucky hit scored by the book manufacturer there are countless failures. The author believes too often that fortune is within his grasp. Let us recall the words that Cervantes put into the mouth of that grand lunatic, Don Quixote. The Don was expatiating on the value of his book. He was assisting the world at large, and explaining 'the proper and natural office of knight errant.' This was the conclusion of his speech: 'I have merited the honour of being put in print in almost all the nations of the world. Thirty thousand volumes of my history have been printed already, and thirty thousand millions more are likely to be printed if heaven prevent not.' Jonathan Swift indulged in a similar pleasantry. You may find it in his letter to the publisher of the Dublin Weekly Journal (1728). By means of a tragedy, a comedy, and various pamphlets, 'casual odes, familiar epistles, lampoons, satires, dedications,' the Dean proposed making something over £10,000.

'WITH THE FLAG TO PRETORIA.'

To the Editor of the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record.

Dear Sir,—We have just received Part 12 of the above, with the heading on cover, 'Read notice at bottom of page.' This notice informs subscribers that unless they order 'Harmsworth's Copyright Design covers, they cannot get the title-page and index to the volume!' Surely a more flagrant case of boycotting booksellers &c. never occurred in the trade. We are the channels by which Messrs. Harmsworth's publications are circulated. We have to pay cash in advance, and, though 'The Flag' is sent 'carriage paid,' the profit is none too large, seeing we have often to wait months for our money. We can, however, as a rule, get something out of the binding of the numbers, but even this is now to be taken from us. Most people prefer to choose their own bindings, and we fail to see why any who so desire should be refused the title-page and index, which are surely a part of the book itself.

Yours very truly,

LIBRARIANS' CONGRESS IN PARIS.

As we announced some time ago, an International Congress of Librarians will be held in Paris from the 20th to the 23rd inst. The following additional particulars will be of value to many of our readers:—

The general programme has been divided into four main divisions, which, the committee points out, are to be considered only as a basis for discussion and consideration. To these main subjects are appended various related questions; and it is announced that contributions upon interesting points not outlined in the preliminary programme will be welcome.

The general subject for the first division of the programme is the history, legislation, and organisation of public libraries, with consideration of copyright depository requirements. The appended questions touch upon (1) the new information now available regarding library history from its beginning to the present time; (2) study and comparison of library laws; (3) international exchanges; (4) relation of libraries with the administrative authorities, states, municipalities, corporations, &c.; (5) the best organisation for popular libraries; (6) the personnel of libraries, qualifications, and selection of candidates.

In the second division the general subject is library buildings, equipment, and care, and the sub-topics are: (1) study of the care of libraries in the Middle Ages; (2) presentation of the best means of installing books in a new library and of improving the arrangement of an old library; (3) account of the best methods, as planned or as in use, in libraries recently installed; (4) report on special precautions desirable to insure libraries from danger of fire.

The third division is devoted to the various branches of a broad subject. Treatment of manuscripts, printed books, maps, photographs, &c.; acquisition, registration, and stamping of books, inventories, and catalogues, means of preservation, repairing, binding, are the main topics scheduled, while the minor questions to be brought up include best recent methods of preparing a catalogue for a new library or improving the catalogues of an old library, application to library economy of the various systems of bibliographical classification, treatment of ephemera and public documents that should be preserved but cannot be immediately catalogued, the care of books and the best means of preserving them, and the preservation and restoration of palimpsests, manuscripts, maps, early printed books, &c.

Under division four is scheduled the subject: 'Use of books inside and outside of libraries,' the sub-topics appended being: (1) Under what conditions should the issue of books be authorised for the various classes of libraries? (2) What regulations should be adopted regarding the lending of valuable books and manuscripts from one library to another? (3) The responsibility of librarians for the use and lending of the books confided to their charge, and (4) The dangers of conveying contagious diseases through public library books, and preventive measures. The official language of the Congress will be French, but papers in other languages will be admissible provided they are accompanied by an epitome in French.

REVIEWS.

From Mr. J. W. Arrowsmith, Bristol.—'Aspects of Golf,' by Horace G. Hutchinson. In this little volume the author discourses in a chatty, readable style of some of the more prominent topics in connection with the popular game. Thus we have chapters on 'Golf under the New Code,' 'Golf of the Rising Generation,' 'How to Practise: Methods of Play,' 'Social Aspects of Golf,' 'Some American Views of the Game,' and so forth. Among the beneficial results of golf, we notice, is set the improvement of the caddie. No doubt the social influences he is subjected to while carrying about the clubs of his master are all for good, but as much could be said of every other game where working men and their superiors are brought into association. We fancy, in his desire to show the advantages of golf, Mr. Hutchinson has rather strained a point or two.

From Messrs. Burns & Oates. — 'Honour without Renown,' by Mrs. Innes Browne. Amid the rush of latter-day notoriety, the artificiality and craving for publicity in modern life, it is pleasant to find a story that deals with unobtrusive unselfishness, and that relates the efforts generously made to relieve the poorer and weaker ones of this world. Such a story is 'Honour without Renown,' which should appeal with quiet effect to the more thoughtful of fiction-readers, and be more productive of good influence than the majority of novels that are written. The author has something to learn in the art of the fiction-weaver, but her very weaknesses may be said to be her great strength.

From Messrs. Cassell & Co.—'The Official Guide to the Great Eastern Railway, the Royal Mail Route to Holland, Harwich Route to the Continent, via the Hook of Holland; also to Rotterdam, Antwerp, Hamburg, and Esbjerg.' Illustrated. The reader who is supplied with this bulky guide in his travels over the Great Eastern Railway will certainly have a particularly interesting companion; and even those compelled by inexorable fate to stay at home will find much pleasure in turning over its pages. The matter is in most respects so complete as to occasion a feeling of surprise. Thus we have quite a lengthy description of Cambridge, extending over several pages, and each of the colleges is treated in detail, with views of the more important buildings and interiors. In the introduction some practical information in regard to routes, seaside resorts, fares, luggage, and the like is given, which can scarcely fail to be of assistance to the traveller. The illustrations, we should mention, are exceptionally good for this class of book, and there are also a number of maps.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'Many Daughters,' by Sarah Tytler. The author's sympathetic knowledge of human nature, and her keen perception of the difficulties that beset the path of her sisters in life, who desire to be of some use in the world, are excellently displayed in this volume. The work may be said to be a tribute to the efforts of the Women's Institute in Grosvenor Crescent to further the education and well-being of working women—a laudable endeavour to which a full measure of support should be given. The story is highly interesting as showing that even among girls animated by a high and noble purpose small petty faults of disposition will frequently obtrude themselves, but that perseverance and resolution will eventually overcome all obstacles.

From Mr. Henry J. Drane.—'Sir Walter's Wife: a Story of Two Reigns,' by Emily Richings. Much care has evidently been expended on this story, the main incidents of which are founded on actual fact. The authoress has perhaps sacrificed something of fictional interest to her desire for veracity, and a more unfettered hand would probably have been attended with greater success. The story, however, has many features of interest, and in its historical relations can scarcely fail to claim attention.

From Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co.—'Outridden,' by Fox Russell. Readers who are partial to a good, rousing sporting story of the old-fashioned sort, in which a little hunting, a little racing, a little love-making, and a little villainy are adroitly worked up together, will find Mr. Russell's novel immensely to their liking. There is perhaps not much depth or powerful delineation of character in the narrative, but who that is enamoured of outdoor life and exercise requires such exhibition? The story is breezy, exhilarating, and manly, and with these attributes the lover of sport will be more than content. 'Outridden,' though to some extent made up of old material, can at least never be said to pall upon the appetite, which is more than can be stated of many present-day novels.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'On Alien Shores,' by Leslie Keith. Few of the author's previous stories have interested us so much as this, and in effective contrast of character, knowledge of Scottish life, and sympathetic power of narration it stands far above the majority of novels recently issued. Nothing startling in the way of plot is introduced, but the old material which can never fail to charm the reader's attention by reason of its strong human attributes is refurbished with dexterous skill, and the mind responds to its influence as of yore. Susie Barentine, the heroine of the story, is a girl who would win anyone's heart, apart from the fact that the events of her life, as here displayed, are eminently calculated to win romantic sympathy. She leaves a rich, but worldly grandmother's house to marry a poor, honourable Scotchman, and by this insane act she cuts herself off from all her influential connections and is condemned to a life of comparative privation and drudgery. So long as this is spent with her husband, all is well, but through the exigencies of business he is compelled to go out to China, and the years of his absence she passes in the uncongenial society of his sister in Scotland. This sister, Isabella Gillespie, together with the dear little 'mother,' and all the Edinburgh surroundings, is sketched with a facile hand. Hard and unsentimental, with a stern adherence to what she considers her duty, Isabella triumphs over other and more impressible natures by her very fixity of narrow-minded purpose. But the husband eventually returns, buoyant and successful, from his foreign mission, and the domestic martyrdom of the heroine is ended. The story is certain to interest those whose tastes have not been vitiated by purely sensational fiction.

From Mr. John Lane.—'The Birds of my Parish,' by Evelyn H. Pollard. When we first took up this volume we had some idea that the 'birds of my parish' referred to certain human beings of the neighbourhood in whom the author had humorously found a resemblance in character to the feathered denizens of the air. But this we soon found out to be a mistake. The birds were actually birds—the thrush, blackbird, bullfinch, tit, hedge sparrow, woodpecker, wagtail, &c., to wit—and a very chatty, unaffected account was given of them, evidently proceeding from one who took a keen interest in their doings and had marked their minutest habits. The description is often fancifully interwoven into the form of a little story, in which the birds are supposed to express their views of life and each other. The volume, we think, through its attractive simplicity of narration, should be especially useful in the education of children, gradually leading them to take an interest in natural history, but it is by no means without charm for the older reader. Several illustrations of country scenery, such as 'The Haunt of the Sedge-warbler,' 'Where the Moorhen Lives,' 'On the Snipe Meadows,' and 'The Boundary Bridge over the Beck,' are admirably in keeping with the contents of the volume while also effective in themselves. 'The Birds of my Parish' should form a charming companion for a lazy afternoon by the hedgerow or riverside.

From Mr. John Long.—'Native Born,' by William Sylvester Walker ('Coo-ee'). There is genuine 'grit' in this novel, so to speak, though perhaps here and there the style is a little unpolished, and the plot might be more carefully knit together. But the story has all the vigorous charm of Australian life, and the exciting events which it includes lose none of their interest from being described in rough uncultured language. From the moment of the hero's landing in Melbourne, a comparatively penniless man bent on making his fortune, we are interested in his career, and thereafter we have little cause for relaxing our attention to his doings. Surely for the young and well-constitutioned man, who is willing to work, there is no place like one of our colonies for his explorations! Charlie Leigh buckles to bravely, animated, no doubt, by thoughts of the fascinating young girl, true to him in all his misfortunes and failures, whom he has left in the old country. Though he has a capital of five hundred pounds in the bank, he at first becomes a cab-driver, and afterwards enlists in the Victorian Mounted Police, practically as a representative of the detective service. From this time forth exciting adventures become almost a daily accompaniment of his life, and the account of his doings forms very absorbing reading. The story, as we have said, is rough, but in this respect it suits the character of its subject, and it may be questioned whether any more refined method of narration would have served the occasion so well. Ultimately the hero after many varied experiences is united to 'the girl he left behind him,' and even his staunch friends are not left utterly deprived of the world's choicest gifts.

From the same.—'Paul the Optimist,' by W. P. Dothie. The hero of this novel well deserves his title. Through a peculiarly varied career which embraces the positions of apprentice to a large clothier's firm, pawnbroker's assistant, author's amanuensis, schoolmaster, clerk at a gasworks, and confidential man in a brokerage establishment, he pursues his way with a cheery optimism that is almost startling. The brightness of his nature—we had almost said simplicity—seems also to affect the character of his surroundings, for surely never in the course of one short lifetime did man ever meet such a number of kind-hearted friends, anxious to interest themselves in his affairs, as Paul Onslow does. Indeed, he has need of friends, for not only is he poor, but, his father having been murdered, he has incurred the deadly enmity of the murderers whose connection with the crime he is endeavouring to trace. In this connection he has some rather exciting adventures, and more than once nearly comes by his death at their hands. But so optimistic a young fellow is obviously not easy to overcome, and accordingly we are not surprised to find him at the close of the narrative not only in possession of the desired secret but also enjoying many of the good things of this world, including the girl whom he has loved from a very early stage of his career. 'Paul the Optimist' is a bright, interesting story, which should revive the despondent reader's belief in the good nature of his fellow beings and cause him generally to take a more hopeful view of life.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. 'The Colombian and Venezuelan Republics, with Notes on other parts of Central and South America,' by William L. Scruggs. The author of this volume was for many years United States Minister to Colombia and Venezuela, and the result of his experiences and investigations in these Republics, as well as in Central and South America generally, is now laid before the public. He first commences with a description of the Isthmus of Panama, next devotes a chapter to Panama canal projects, and then transports his readers to the old Spanish main, and a consideration of the city of Carthagena, Spanish-American commerce in the seventeenth century, &c. Succeeding chapters are respectively devoted to the subjects of the valley of the Magdalena, the Colombian capital, the Alta Plain of Bogotá, the race problem in America, democracy in South America, Spanish-American revolutions, Colombia and its possibilities, the Island of Curaçao, Caracas and its environments, the staple products and mineral resources of Venezuela, the Monroe doctrine, the Anglo-Venezuelan boundary dispute, the award by the arbitration tribunal of 1899, and the principle of international arbitration. From this it will be seen that Mr. Scruggs traverses a wide extent of ground, and that, in addition to his description of places, many interesting topics of international importance are touched upon. Writing from the point of view of a man who has actually lived among the scenes and people he describes, his work has a value not possessed by those who theorise on the statements made by others. Several illustrations are included in the book, and these add force and realism to the text. There are also three maps.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'Studies in Texts: for Family, Church and School,' by Joseph Parker, D.D., Vol. V. The special characteristics of Dr. Parker's religious writings are now so well known as scarcely to require mention at our hands. The same keen perception of effect and easy flow of ideas are as observable in the present volume as in those that have preceded it. The style is never laboured, and the apt dexterity and originality with which he treats the various subjects is remarkable. Among the topics are: 'The Divine Witness in Man,' 'The Forgiveness of Sins,' 'The Poor and their Poverty,' 'Limitations,' and 'Birth and Resurrection.' At whatever page the reader may open the book there is sure to be something in the text that will rivet his attention.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'The Strong Arm,' by Robert Barr. Germany, during its ancient turbulent times when the nobles were all more or less at war with one another, and the clash of sword upon armour and storming of moated castle were scarcely ever absent from the land, is a favourite subject with Mr. Barr, and he again returns to it in 'The Strong Arm;' but on the whole the story seems to possess less of the elements of popularity than his previous novel dealing with the neighbourhood of the Rhine, 'The Countess Tekla.' It is a good piece of work, however, full of stirring incidents, the heroic deeds of brave men and the inspiriting presence of beautiful women. Interwoven with the narrative is a fine vein of romance, a feature that is notable in most of Mr. Barr's works, and to which he is largely indebted for his success as a novelist. The character of 'The Strong Arm' is such as powerfully incites to youthful enthusiasm, and there are few readers, we believe, who will not feel their pulse stirred to quickened action and the blood run warmer through their veins, by the perusal of Mr. Barr's vigorous swash-bucklering romance. A frontispiece, showing the appearance of the gallant much enduring hero before the dread Council, excellently serves as a keynote to the narrative, and agreeably emphasises the nature of the many exciting events that are to follow.

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'Casque and Cowl: a Tale of the French Reformation,' by F. M. Cotton Walker. The author of this story has scarcely got into the spirit of the period of which he writes, and the style is distinguished by a modernity that detracts very largely from the general effect. Some compression of the material would also have been an improvement, and the volume as a whole may be said to suffer from want of that knowledge of what is essential in a story which forms the skilled novelist's most valuable gift. 'Casque and Cowl,' however, has its interesting moments, and though the blue pencil might have been used to advantage, with the result of bringing the narrative more closely together and increasing its hold on the reader's attention, there are plenty of fiction-lovers, we may be sure, who will be quietly interested in its pages and will thoroughly appreciate the religious feeling with which the volume is pervaded. Several illustrations depicting the more tragic incidents of the story are supplied by J. Littler.

From Messrs. George Routledge & Sons.—'Sir Edward Clarke (Her Majesty's Solicitor-General, 1886-1892): Public Speeches, 1890-1900.' There is a certain touch of irony in the dedication of this volume by Sir Edward Clarke 'to the electors of the Borough of Plymouth.' It is as if he said to them: 'You complain of my conduct; well, here are my speeches in your service, see if there is anything you can complain of in them—anyhow, be well assured that I stand by my public utterances, and have nothing to withdraw or add to them.' To the speeches themselves it is scarcely necessary to allude in detail. They are admirable specimens of oratorical art, and are certain to be warmly prized by admirers of the learned gentleman, among whom we humbly venture to subscribe ourselves.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'An Active Army Alphabet.' Illustrated by Hassall. This is an especially well-produced book, though we are not quite sure that it is one likely to meet with its deserved measure of success. A little more humour in the illustrations would have been an invaluable adjunct. It is interesting of course to learn that 'B were the Boers that it (the British Army) licked into shape'; but there is an uncomfortable feeling abroad now that all the licking has not been entirely on the one side, and the picture is likely to be turned over in silence. The chief merit of the volume consists in its admirable specimens of colour-printing, but whether this is sufficient to ensure its popularity with the general public remains to be seen. For the sake of the painstaking labour that has evidently been bestowed we sincerely hope it is.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Jan Oxber,' by Orme Agnus. There are five stories in this volume, of which 'Jan Oxber' is the longest, and in some respects, best. Jan was a village wheelwright in Wessex, who first started a revolt in his neighbourhood against the tyranny of the parson and squire. A man of some 'book-larnen,' which was a terrible affliction in the eyes of his narrow-minded old mother, he early acquired an independence of manner that excited unspeakable awe among his fellows, and his conduct was the subject of village gossip for many years after his death. 'He was the vurst man 'bout here, I have heard vrom my vather, as did ever stand up vor his rights to zquire and passon. Volks down in thease (this) part used to be avraid ov offenden zquire and passon, well knowen as they'd only such rights as they give 'em. It zims since Jan stood up vor his rights as a man, as my vather allus zaid, as things have been different in zome ways vor we pore labouren volks. A vine talk it made at the time I mind, and volks zimmed to lift up their heads avterwards, and zquire never zimmed as much to we since. And so we volks allus had a liking vor en, as our vathers had avore us.' The wrong that poor Jan suffered at the squire's hands was about the greatest that man could inflict, though his great love for his wife caused him to be exceedingly forgiving, so far as she was concerned. But towards the wicked, dissolute squire his action was absolutely unrelenting, and having exposed his conduct to the beautiful girl he was about to marry, and so prevented the match, the matter culminates in a great fight, in which the squire is thrown to the ground and seriously injured. The story is rugged in its character, and not without pathos. The other contents of the volume show an equal familiarity with country characteristics, and are pleasantly interesting.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'The Married Miss Binks,' by John Strange Winter. After her usual fashion Mrs. Stannard at once takes up the thread of her narrative, and encumbering herself with no long descriptions or introductory remarks, proceeds to tell her story in her own cheery, unconventional way. And indeed it is not every one who could so enliven the commonplace as she does. Candidly speaking, there is much that is very ordinary in 'The Married Miss Binks,' and it is only the author's good-humoured method of narration that carries the reader almost unconsciously over the dangerous places. Towards the middle of the book a little more substance is imported, while at the end quite a thrill of excitement, comparatively speaking, is caused by the discovery that the husband of Miss Binks, who has hitherto been in ignorance regarding his parentage, is actually an Earl! Though the frank, easy flowing style of the book will no doubt gain it many readers, 'The Married Miss Binks' we are afraid will not add to the reputation of the author. 'John Strange Winter' can do much better than this, if she likes to take the trouble.

New Editions.—Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons have sent out a fifteenth and cheaper edition in a neat binding of 'Mona Maclean: Medical Student,' by Graham Travers (Margaret Todd, M.D.) The story, it will be remembered, is chiefly concerned with the career of a young lady medical student, who, after twice failing in her London University examination, eventually takes a first class in physiology, obtaining an exhibition and gold medal. But most of the interest centres round a small village, where under rather misguiding circumstances she first meets the young doctor whom she afterwards marries. —From Messrs. Macmillan & Co. we have received a new popular edition, well printed and tastefully bound, of Charles Kingsley's 'At Last: a Christmas in the West Indies.' The fact of this book having been reprinted no less than twelve times since its first appearance in 1871, to say nothing of two new editions that have appeared, testifies amply to its great popularity, and we have no doubt that the present generation of readers will enjoy it as heartily as did their predecessors.—Mr. T. Fisher Unwin has issued a new and popular impression of that interesting book 'In Dwarfland and Cannibal Country: a Record of Travel and Discovery in Central Africa,' by A. B. Lloyd. We have before spoken favourably of this volume; and the account of the author's explorations, more especially in the pigmy country, reads more like a work of fiction than sober actual fact. The illustrations, which are very numerous, naturally form a strong attraction of the volume.—Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have sent out a new edition in a well-designed binding of George Borrow's 'Lavengro.' The volume, which is not distinguished by very clear print, is supplied with an interesting introduction by Theodore Watts-Dunton. In this he gives some personal reminiscences of Borrow.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

HEALTH AND CONDITION IN THE ACTIVE AND THE SEDENTARY.

By NATHANIEL EDWARD YORKE-DAVIES,

Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, M.R.C.S.; Author of 'Foods for the Fat,' 'The Dietetics of Obesity,' 'Aids to Long Life,' &c.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON THE WORK.

'Those who desire a long and healthy life will perhaps find their best means of attaining it in the study and observance of such rules as are laid down here. . . . The book is a rational and practical guide to "Health and Condition."'—MORNING POST.

'Full of valuable hints and suggestive warnings as to the results of improper food and insufficient exercise.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Books like this ought to be very useful.'—GLOBE.

'We hope our readers will note our remarks and consult the valuable book that suggests them.'—QUEEN.

'The author brings a very wide, if not the widest, of all experiences to bear upon his subject, and he treats it most lucidly.'—SPORTSMAN.

'"Of the making of books there is no end," but if the books are of the instructive nature of this work we can never have too many of them.'—PUBLIC OPINION.

'This brief book is written with arch-vivacity, and is not only readable but racy.'—SPEAKER.

'Distinctly diverting is this modest narrative, and it may be recommended heartily to lovers of light reading.'—GLOBE.

TRADE LISTS SENT ON RECEIPT OF TRADE CARD

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every ear is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.

2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.

3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.

4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.

5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.

6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

Bell's Illustrated Classics

Edited by E. C. MARCHANT, M.A., late Classical Master at St. Paul's School

Full Illustrated Prospectus of this Series post free on application.

THE special object of this Series is to make the editions as interesting and helpful as possible to the intelligent learner; and, with this object, numerous Illustrations have been introduced. Though based on authentic sources, these are not mere copies of antiquities, such as are to be found in every Classical Dictionary, but pictures drawn with a view to bringing the reality of Greek and Roman life before the reader.

Views of places, as well as Maps and Plans, are also freely introduced.

The volumes are equipped with Introductions, Notes, Grammatical Appendices, and in some of the prose authors, Exercises on the Text. Vocabularies are also given, but the volumes may be had without the Vocabularies, if preferred.

The volumes are printed at the Oxford University Press, pott 8vo., and are issued in three forms:

1. With Notes and Vocabulary complete, 1*s.* 6*d.*
2. Without Vocabulary, 1*s.* 6*d.*
3. With Vocabulary, but Without Notes, 1*s.*

Vol. III. THE WAR IN THE PENINSULA. With 16 Portraits and 15 Plans.
Vol. IV. WATERLOO AND ST. HELENA. With 16 Portraits and 10 Plans.

THE TIMES.—'He paints on a large canvas, and aims at broad effects. In this he succeeds admirably. . . . The story is broadly told, but very vigorously, and it is wonderful the amount of interesting detail and well-inspired comment that Mr. Fitchett manages to weave into his narrative.'

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

FIGHTS FOR THE FLAG. Second Edition. With 16 Portraits, 13 Plans, and a Facsimile Letter of the Duke of Marlborough. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

DEEDS THAT WON THE EMPIRE. Twelfth Edition. With 16 Portraits and 11 Plans. Crown 8vo. 6*s.*

'The Nuttall Encyclopædia' is a work which can be constantly turned to for information in a concise form on matters of daily intercourse.

THE DISTINCTIVE POINTS ARE

1st. ITS CHEAPNESS. The cloth style costs 3*s*. 6*d*. for a volume containing 700 pages, with upwards of 16,000 pithy articles.

2nd. THE VALUE OF ITS CONTENTS. In a small compass, the gist of information, such as could only be obtained after extensive literary research, is clearly and concisely given.

3rd. ITS HANDINESS AND READINESS OF REFERENCE. Under a single alphabetical arrangement its short pithy articles will yield at a glance on numberless occasions the information likely to be sought for.

Its price and scope should commend it especially to The Careful Newspaper Reader.
Heads of Families, with children at school, whose persistent questions have often to go without an answer.
The Schoolmaster and Tutor.
The Student with a shallow purse.
The Busy Man and the Man of Business.

J. D. HARDING'S ART MANUALS

LESSONS ON ART. By J. D. HARDING. Containing 127 Lessons, 155 pages of text, 48 Lithographic Plates, and 103 Outlines.

LESSONS ON TREES. By J. D. HARDING. Containing Sixty-three Lessons on Sixty-three Lithographic Plates, together with descriptive Text to each Lesson.

The late Mr. RUSKIN wrote:—'They are deservedly praised, for they are the only works by a modern draughtsman which express in any wise the energy of trees, and the law of growth, of which we have been speaking. There are no lithographic sketches which for truth of general character, obtained with little cost of time, at all rival Harding's.'

NEW PRIZE BOOKS. At all prices. Well written. Well illustrated.

7/6 HEROES OF THE UNITED SERVICE: Records of Noble Deeds in the British Army and Navy. By L. VALENTINE. Containing upwards of 150 Illustrations in the Text, and 32 Full-page Plates. Large crown 4to. cloth gilt, and gilt edges.

'This handsome volume will prove at once a delight and an education to its happy recipient. The tales therein of heroism, endurance, strategy, and simple courage cannot fail to interest and arouse the enthusiasm of any British boy. The volume is especially well timed now that the War in the Transvaal has aroused a burst of patriotism and consequent interest in all things military.'

First and Second Series. Coloured Plates. In Pocket-book form, size 6½ in. by 4½ in., in limp cloth gilt, round corners, 6*s*. each; also in best French morocco, with Pocket and Blotting Book for Specimens, 7*s*. 6*d*. each net.

WAYSIDE AND WOODLAND BLOSSOMS. Pocket Guides to the British Wild Flowers. By EDWARD STEP, F.L.S. Each with 130 Coloured and 23 Black and White Plates, with clear descriptions of the various species.

'These are just the little book which every true lover of that particular phase of natural beauty, namely, wild flowers, delights to find in his pocket when rambling along country lanes. The delicately-tinted illustrations are absolutely true to their growing counterparts.'—LIVERPOOL MERCURY.

Crown 8vo. cloth gilt, gilt top.

BLACKWOODS'
ILLUSTRATED CLASSICAL TEXTS

GENERAL EDITOR—

H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant-Master at Fettes College.

NOW READY.

Cæsar—Gallic War. Books IV., V. By St. J. B. Wynne Willson, M.A., Assistant-Master at Rugby. With or without Vocabulary. 1*s.* 6*d.* Vocabulary separate, 3*d.*

'Mr. Willson has certainly succeeded in giving boys all the information and help they could possibly desire for translating Cæsar; and we may say that a thorough acquaintance with the contents of this volume would be a considerable step towards a knowledge not only of Latin, but of Roman history and antiquities in general. . . . The notes are copious and accurate, while an appendix of proper names, with historical and geographical notes, is a good feature.'
JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

'A very attractively edited volume, with some quite successful pictures and good notes which reach a really high level of merit.'—GUARDIAN.

'We wonder how it can all be done at the price.'—PUBLIC SCHOOLS MAGAZINE.

Virgil—Georgics. Book IV. By J. SARGEAUNT, M.A., Assistant-Master at Westminster. 1*s.* 6*d.*
(Prescribed for the Cambridge Higher Local Examinations, 1900–1901.)

'A noteworthy book. . . . No boy with a live brain could fail to derive great benefit both in knowledge and stimulus from this book.'—GUARDIAN.

'The book is the best we have seen of the new type of school-books. If Messrs. Blackwood keep up to this standard, their series will stand high.'—LITERATURE.

'There is a pleasing freshness about this volume.'—ATHENÆUM.

'A most attractive edition.'—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

Cicero—In Catilinam. Books I.-IV. By H. W. AUDEN, M.A., Assistant-Master at Fettes College. 1*s.* 6*d.*

'A good feature of the book is to be found in the illustrations, which will help the young reader to realise.' SPECTATOR.

'Some striking illustrations. . . . A good section on the life of Cicero.'—ATHENÆUM.

'A very useful school edition. The notes are good, and the introduction upon Cicero particularly so. The illustrations which enliven the text are relevant and interesting.'
PUBLIC SCHOOLS MAGAZINE.

Ovid—Metamorphoses (Selections). By J. H. VINCE, M.A., Assistant-Master at Bradfield. 1*s.* 6*d.*

Demosthenes—Olynthiacs I.-III. By H. SHARPLEY, M.A., formerly Assistant-Master at Marlborough. [Immediately.

BLACKWOODS' ENGLISH CLASSICS

With Frontispieces. In fcap. 8vo. Volumes, cloth.

General Editor—J. H. LOBBAN, M.A.,

Editor of 'English Essays,' formerly Examiner in English in the University of Aberdeen.

Macaulay—Life of Johnson. By D. NICHOL SMITH, M.A., Editor of 'King Henry VIII.' (Warwick Shakespeare). 1*s.* 6*d.*

'A most desirable edition. The introduction includes the life of the author, together with an excellent appreciation of his style and critical methods, whilst the one difficulty in Macaulay—his fondness for allusion—is overcome by a complete and interesting set of notes, involving considerable research in eighteenth century biography.'—EDUCATIONAL NEWS.

Goldsmith—Traveller, Deserted Village, and other Poems. By J. H. LOBBAN, M.A., formerly Assistant-Professor and Examiner in English, University of Aberdeen. 1*s.* 6*d.*

'Goldsmith has never appeared in more attractive garb than he does here, type and binding being alike beautiful. Nor do the literary accompaniments of the text, in the shape of introduction and notes, deserve less praise. . . . The editor's remarks on the poems are full of fine feeling and discrimination. . . . In short, this is not only an ideal edition for schools, but is well worthy of a place on the student's bookshelf.'—EDUCATIONAL NEWS.

Milton—Paradise Lost. Books I.-IV. By J. LOGIE ROBERTSON, M.A., First English Master, Edinburgh Ladies' College. 2*s.* 6*d.*

'Introduction and notes show everywhere this writer's [Mr. J. Logie Robertson] scholarship in English literature, and experience in adapting his knowledge to educational purposes.'

'A most valuable text.' LITERARY WORLD. SCOTSMAN.

Cowper—The Task, and Minor Poems. By ELIZABETH LEE, Author of 'A School History of English Literature.' 2*s.* 6*d.*

'The notes in this volume are excellent.'—LITERARY WORLD.

Johnson—Lives of Milton and Addison. By Professor J. W. DUFF, M.A., the Durham College of Science, Newcastle-upon-Tyne. 2*s.* 6*d.*

LOW'S

The object of the Charts is to simplify the work of the teacher by supplying him with first-rate drawings, in bold outline, of arrangements of apparatus for elucidating the more difficult experimental details of chemical manipulation. Apparatus, inaccessible to ninety-nine per cent. of the schools of the country on the ground of cost, is always available in the lecture halls of the leading Colleges and Universities. A cheap equivalent to the less pretentious classes has long been desired, and we therefore appeal to all Teachers of Chemistry who are preparing pupils for the Examinations of the Science and Art Department, the London Matriculation or Intermediate Science, Oxford and Cambridge Local, Preliminary Scientific, &c., &c., to carefully consider the merits of THESE AIDS TO THE TEACHING OF CHEMISTRY. They have been compiled from the most reliable sources, and embody much pictorial information which is not easy of access to most Teachers, many of the Illustrations not yet having appeared in Ordinary Text-Books.

They would be of great service in all organised Science Schools, and an acquisition to every Chemical Laboratory, serving not merely as aids in the Lecture, but also as a means of mutual help among Students. An inspection of the following list of subjects figured on the Charts will convey a clear notion as to their scope and probable use.

CHEMICAL

LIST OF SUBJECTS FIGURED ON THE CHARTS.

No. 1 Catalan Forge for Iron-smelting—A Modern Blast Furnace—The Bessemer Process.

No. 2 Manufacture of Nitric Acid—Boracic Acid.

No. 3 Gravimetric Composition of Air—Atomic Weight of Carbon—Gravimetric Synthesis of Water.

No. 11 Extraction of Zinc—Distillation of Mercury.

No. 12 Liquefaction of Gases—Cailletet's Apparatus.

No. 13 Extraction of Phosphorus—Distillation of Iodine.

No. 14 Atmolysis — Dissociation — Sprengel Pump.

No. 15 Oxyhydrogen Furnace—Muffle Furnace — Cupellation of Silver.

No. 16 Extraction of Bismuth—Preparation of Chromium.

No. 17 Spectroscope with Comparison Prism — Reversal of the Sodium Lines.

No. 18 The Leblanc Process.

No. 19 Apparatus for Saturating Brine with Ammonia.

No. 20 Reverberatory Electric Furnace—Electrolytic preparation of Aluminium.

No. 21 Ozonising Apparatus, &c.

No. 22 Low Temperature Experiments Volumetric Composition of Water.

No. 23 Extraction of Copper—Furnace for Refining Copper.

No. 24 Manufacture of Sulphuric Acid.

No. 25 Concentration of Sulphuric Acid.

The SCHOOLMASTER says of the Charts:—'The number of charts in this series is twenty-five, but as nearly every sheet gives two or more distinct drawings, a very considerable amount of ground is covered by them. As regards the general character of the set, the theoretical experimental, and practical aspects of the subject are all represented. That recent experimental work is not neglected is shown by the inclusion of the apparatus for the isolation of Fluorine. The drawings are nearly all in outline, are clear and exact, and free from unnecessary detail. They are certainly to be considered very suitable for class use, and we commend them to the notice of all whose teaching of chemistry is not strictly elementary.'

MECHANICS. A TEXT-BOOK OF MECHANICS AND HYDROSTATICS. By Herbert Hancock, M.A., F.R.A.S., F.R.Met.Soc., late Scholar and Triple Prizeman at St. John's College, Cambridge, Lecturer on Geometry to the Architectural Association, London. With over 400 Diagrams. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 5*s.*

'This book is the embodiment of a series of notes which the author had written for his own use when lecturing on this subject. He has now so arranged them that by the help of copious illustrative examples and diagrams taken from common objects, the student may be able to master the fundamental principles upon which a knowledge of mechanics and hydrostatics is based. In order that those who have not hitherto acquired much knowledge of mathematics may have some tools to work with, Mr. Hancock has explained the method of measuring angles, and the geometrical meanings of the terms used in plane trigonometry; and throughout the book he has described each portion of this subject in so simple a manner that there should be no difficulty in obtaining a very useful knowledge of the principles. The author has attached to each chapter a large number of questions, the answers to which are given at the end of the book. Many of these questions are taken from the matriculation examinations of the University of London, and those of the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and exemplify the kind of problems generally set by examiners.'—Builder.

'A text-book which is well devised to make the student think for himself, the best training he can possibly have.'—English Mechanic.

ZOOLOGY. TEXT-BOOK OF ZOOLOGY. By Dr. J. E. V. Boas, Lecturer in Zoology in the Royal College of Agriculture, Copenhagen. Translated by J. W. Kirkaldy, Tutor in Natural Science to the Association for the Education of Women, Oxford, and E. C. Pollard, B.Sc. Lond., Assistant Lecturer in Biology, University Extension College, Reading. Illustrated with 427 Figures. 1 vol. royal 8vo. cloth extra, 21*s.* net.

Dr. Boas's Text-book was published in Danish and Swedish editions. The present translation is from the second German edition, with certain alterations by the author, who has revised the whole. The book is intended for the use of students preparing for the examinations of the science and medical groups, and does not pretend to be a complete text-book of Zoology. It is also hoped that the numerous references to the fauna of the British Isles, contained in the text (although not found in books for those reading for the Degree of Bachelor of Science), will render the work so practical as to make it valuable to students of Medicine or Veterinary Science, and Fellows of Agricultural Colleges.

A MOST TIMELY BOOK

NEW WORK ON CHINA BY MR. JOSEPH WALTON, M.P.

'EXTREMELY INTERESTING.'—Morning Post.

Now ready, crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6*s*.

China and the Present Crisis

With Notes on a Visit to Japan and Korea

BY JOSEPH WALTON, M.P.

WITH MAP OF CHINA

EXTRACTS FROM SOME EARLY REVIEWS:—

'It consists merely of the unvarnished jottings of an intelligent and painstaking observer, who in the course of his travels noted down a number of interesting points and had access to a number of interesting people. From these jottings the student of the Far Eastern question cannot fail to glean many useful and instructive hints, and especially from the conversations the author had with Oriental statesmen and European diplomatists.'—TIMES.

'. . . The book will be found useful to all those who desire to study the commercial and political position of the Chinese empire at the present time.'
ATHENÆUM.

'A valuable account of China and the Chinese, which all who wish to make up their minds about a very puzzling situation would do well to study for themselves. The map is extremely clear and good. Mr. Walton could scarcely have chosen a more appropriate season for issuing the account of his recent travels in the Far East.'—STANDARD.

'Mr Joseph Walton writes in an easy conversational style, and makes a dry subject eminently readable. . . . We have an enormous commercial interest at stake, and all who desire to know how we stand in the Far East will welcome Mr. Walton's work. It is emphatically a volume to be read conscientiously, and kept at hand for future reference.'
DUBLIN DAILY EXPRESS.

'Mr. Walton makes no pretence to the literary culture of the schools, but none the less effectually tells a plain unvarnished tale. His book is informing upon every page, and much information which has hitherto been inaccessible is now placed at the service of the public.'—NEWCASTLE DAILY CHRONICLE.

'Dealing carefully and authoritatively with matters of purely political and commercial interest. . . . Abounds in vivid and picturesque descriptions of the scenery and the life of the people. . . . Forms an important contribution to our knowledge of the Chinese question. The authority of the Member for Barnsley on all political and commercial matters relating to the Far East is universally recognised, and the present work cannot fail to increase his reputation in that respect. The chapter dealing with the present crisis will be read with special interest by all students of politics, and the lessons it enforces may be profitably taken to heart by the statesmen who have, with such disastrous results, hitherto ignored the warnings of those most familiar with the social, political, and commercial conditions of China.'
LEEDS MERCURY.

'So far as one can judge from reading his extremely interesting book, he had no mission to China save that of his own making. He went to see for himself, to learn on the spot things it is impossible to learn from books and newspapers, though most of us must needs be content with these limited sources of information. . . . From Mr. Walton's point of view his visit to China was to him a revelation of the truth. To readers of his book, there is this advantage to be noticed, that they are reading, as it were, the thoughts spoken aloud of a sensible man, with a strong aptitude for affairs and of [illegible] instincts. Mr Walton makes no pretence to what is called style. His narrative does not read with any glamour. . . . Mr. Walton will gain, however, by his straightforward, unmannered narrative the conviction of his readers that things were very much as Mr. Walton saw them and as they would see them did they enjoy the same opportunity.'—MORNING POST.

'It is intrinsically a notable book, and one that will deserve to be widely read long after what we may venture to say are many passing [illegible] have vanished from the Far East.'—NEWCASTLE LEADER.

'On its merits the book would be worth reading at any time: at the present an account at first hand of the condition of China leading to the wild outburst of the Boxers and all that has followed it is of exceptional interest and value. . . . The writer is a keen observer, knowing how to direct his attention to those points most worthy of it, and how to record tersely and simply what he saw and heard.'—NORTHERN WHIG.

'. . . A veritable mine of information, should find many readers.'—STAR.

'No publication could be more opportune than the book on China just written by Mr. Joseph Walton, M.P. . . . Besides having extensive experience as a man of business, familiar with all the requirements of trade, he was enabled, as an alert and enlightened member of Parliament, to appreciate the political bearing of what he saw, and to make good use of the many influential introductions with which he was furnished.'
NOTTINGHAM DAILY EXPRESS.

'Mr. Walton has spared no pains in collecting his information on the spot and presenting it in a clear and telling manner. The book makes very interesting reading at the present time, and well deserves to be read and digested by all who are interested in the future of the Celestial Empire. The book contains a large and interesting map of China, showing the various foreign concessions.'—FINANCIAL NEWS.

'In the course of his visit to most of the centres of political interest and commercial activity, he gathered many valuable facts and received striking impressions which are clearly and effectively set forth in the volume.'
SHEFFIELD DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Mr. Walton has brought away with him from the Far East a great mass of most interesting and valuable information, and if his conclusions do not find universal acceptance, his facts must command most respectful consideration.'—LIVERPOOL DAILY POST.

'The most useful pages of Mr. Walton's book are those which describe his voyage up the Yang-tse-Kiang, for they contain some hints for English traders. There is also an interesting picture of the country through which the relief force must advance upon Pekin.'—YORKSHIRE POST.

'An exceedingly pleasant book, full of information, at a moment when men are seeking that information on all sides. As it is the most recent so it is one of the most readable books on China that one can take up to-day. The volume, which contains a large and valuable coloured map of China, is handsomely printed on excellent paper.'—DONCASTER CHRONICLE.

'. . . Informing and suggestive. The author is a man keenly interested in openings for British trade.'—WESTERN DAILY MERCURY.

'. . . Full of valuable information.'—MORNING LEADER.

'No other book published so far has the same topical interest.'
DAILY DISPATCH.

'The author is but recently home from a journey of eight months in these countries; hence his impressions are fresh, and the book presents a realistic panorama. . . . deserves to be widely studied.'—DUNDEE ADVERTISER.

'. . . Sure to command attention. . . . The concluding portion of the book is occupied with notes of travel in Japan and the Korea. A splendid map of China, showing railway concessions, coalfields, iron mines, navigable waterways, &c., adds to the value of the work.'—CHRISTIAN WORLD.

'Among the many books produced by the crisis in China there is not one that brings out more clearly the importance of that country to the British people, from the commercial and industrial point of view. . . . Mr. Walton's book deserves to be read by everybody interested in our trade in the Far East.'
WORLD.

'There is a great deal of instructive matter to be gleaned from a perusal of the work.'—OBSERVER.

'Indispensable to the political student, and has a useful map showing railway concessions, coalfields, &c.'—OUTLOOK.

'Anyone who is interested in China should read "China and the Present Crisis."'—DAILY EXPRESS.

'An opportune and instructive book. . . . There is much in it that may be read with profit.'—SATURDAY REVIEW.

'Is written in a style of admirable clearness.'—SKETCH.

'Well worth reading for its shrewd observation, its bold application of business principles to foreign politics.'—PUNCH.

'Teems with evidences of acute observation and sound common sense, the more especially as much that the author has to tell is new.'
PALL MALL GAZETTE.

'The book abounds in statistical information of great value.'—KING.

In the current number of the Contemporary Review Mr. W. H. D. Rouse draws a gloomy picture of the position of assistant masters in Secondary Schools. As usual, the difficulties are financial. According to Mr. Rouse, assistant teachers are scandalously underpaid, and he argues, from a principle in human nature, that when the teacher is ill treated or ill recompensed the pupil naturally suffers. Taking the returns of the Charity Commission, it is found that in ten first grade schools the average salary is £242, and in one hundred and ninety others, first or second grade, £105. In twenty East Anglian schools the average is only £103, and eleven smaller schools descend to an average of £52. These data combined 'give a sum just below £120 as the average salary of an assistant.' Mr. Rouse explains that residence—i.e. board and lodging—is included in some cases, but he adds that 'we may leave this out of account, because it is payment of extra work done out of school.' It should be said, however, that 'the Victorian Public Schools,' such as Clifton, Cheltenham, and Marlborough, are not included in these calculations, nor are such schools as Tonbridge and Bedford, because the writer's object has been to 'illustrate the normal condition of country grammar schools.'

These seem from the teacher's point of view to be as bad as they can well be. Mr. Rouse points his moral with two instances that have come within his own experience. A Cambridge B.A. began in Andover Grammar School 'at £15 resident,' and after several changes he found himself with £140 'non-resident' in the grammar school of a country town which is not named. In the second case a London B.A. is at present receiving £130 'non-resident' after an experience of eighteen years. The same pitiful story, Mr. Rouse adds, comes from scores of the smaller country schools. If we are every year spending more and more on education the unfortunate assistant does not appear to benefit by the expenditure. His case is all the sadder when contrasted with that of the headmaster. In Tonbridge, for example, the headmaster receives £5,000 'and upwards,' while his assistants have but £200 apiece. The usual average for a headmaster, Mr. Rouse informs his readers, 'is ten times that of the assistant, falling to five times in the East Anglian schools and even occasionally less.' And he adds this charge: 'So far as my knowledge goes (and, as regards some of their schools, it is not negative knowledge), neither headmaster nor governing body have expressed any dissatisfaction with the state of affairs, or have ever considered means whereby the salaries of assistants might be permanently improved.' This is a serious allegation, and unhappily there is no room for doubt as to its justice. Mr. Rouse is, we believe, an assistant master in Rugby School, and moreover is officially connected with the Assistant Masters' Association. His knowledge of the matters of which he writes is therefore likely to be accurate.

Is it any wonder, he asks, that there is a feeling of deep discontent in the teaching profession? The outsider may reply with some theory about chances of promotion. But the discouraging thing is that the chances of promotion are in most cases rare and remote. Few masters have the luck to get a boarding house, and as few can hope for posts in the richer schools. The assistants in these richer schools number some two hundred, and every two years, remarks Mr. Rouse, Oxford and Cambridge turn out 'as many capable scholars and mathematicians, stamped and certificated.' The chances of obtaining a headmastership are evidently still more remote. Already these conditions are beginning to have disastrous effects. Young men of ability take to teaching without knowing what they are about, and then hasten to abandon it when they discover their mistake. Some go into journalism, some take to the Bar, others become secretaries, solicitors, and so forth. Two years ago a contributor to Longman's Magazine traced the careers of sixty assistant masters known to him. Four of these have got schools of their own, and eight have become curates; amongst the others are a barrister, a solicitor, a gold digger, a professional tenor, a bookmaker (not literary), and a grower of tomatoes. Two are out of work, and cannot find any; one poor old man shot himself; twenty-four only remain as they were, and fifteen have completely disappeared, leaving no trace. Perhaps, comments Mr. Rouse caustically, some light is thrown on the last class by a paragraph in the Wigan Observer of April 21, 1897: 'Septimus Tebay, B.A., a skilful mathematician, and a poet of no mean order, formerly headmaster of Rivington Grammar School, died at the age of 77 in Bolton Workhouse.' In every trade and profession there must be failures, and Mr. Rouse is at more pains to dwell on the hardships than the qualifications of assistant masters. But, merit apart, he discloses a sad state of things which the nation must remedy if it is to get value for the enormous sums that seem to be so inequitably spent on education.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

From their Dublin House Messrs. Blackie & Son are about to issue a new school magazine, entitled 'The Irish School Monthly.' It is pointed out that the radical change that has been made in the Educational Programme has caused a widespread feeling of unrest and excitement in the minds of most of the Irish teachers whose duty it becomes to carry out the details of the scheme. For the past thirty or forty years the system of education has remained practically unaltered, and the teachers have therefore been familiar with the old school books and the old school routine from their earliest youth. But new subjects require new knowledge, and new methods require new models, and to supply all the information necessary for the successful carrying out of the New Programme is the object of the new magazine.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are preparing an illustrated edition of 'Elizabeth and Her German Garden.' The book has been a striking success, the sale up to the present being over twenty thousand copies.

'The Autobiography of a Quack,' Dr. Weir Mitchell's story, now appearing in the Century Magazine, will be published in this country by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.

'The Fourth Generation,' Sir Walter Besant's new novel, will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus on September 6. A week later the same firm will have ready Mark Twain's new book of sketches, 'The Man that Corrupted Hadleyburg.' The title story appeared in an American magazine some months ago.

Mr. W. B. Clive, University Tutorial Press, has in preparation several works of importance in various departments. They include in the Organised Science Series 'Practical Plane and Solid Geometry,' 'Machine Construction and Drawing,' 'Building Construction,' 'First Stage Mathematics,' 'First Stage Physiology,' and 'Section One Physiography,' by Mr. F. Rosenberg, M.A., B.Sc.

To the series of 'Handy Classical Maps,' edited by Mr. G. B. Grundy, of Brasenose College, Oxford, Mr. Murray will shortly add Græcia, Asia Minor, the Roman Empire, and Egypt and the Eastern Empires. These excellent maps merit the attention of all schoolmasters.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co. bring out the very interesting book on 'Profit Sharing between Employer and Employée,' by Mr. Nicholas Payne Gilman, which has attracted much notice in America in the last ten years. Mr. Gilman advocates profit sharing as the most promising and equitable method of settling the vexed questions of the modern industrial world. Tracing the history of the remuneration of labour from the primitive days of product sharing to the payment of wages in money, he shows the false logic of those who condemn the whole wages system as wrong, and seek to supersede it by co-operation. A gradual evolution appears to him more hopeful than a sudden change. A carefully tabulated list gives valuable information as to the number of profit-sharing firms in every country, with their varying methods of payment in cash or annuity, and a second table gives the list of firms who have tried the experiment and failed. The same author's book, also published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., on 'Socialism and the American Spirit,' sets forth the various attempts made in America towards a solution of social and political problems.

Mr. Holman, H.M. Inspector of Schools for the Burnley District, reports that in his opinion a public audit of accounts for the voluntary schools is necessary. Where day schools are held in the same premises and under the same management as Sunday schools, he adds there is need of careful inquiry to secure a proper proportion of expenses. This is hard on the voluntary schools.

There is a pleasing variety in the press appreciations of the late Lord Chief Justice. Thus Mr. Charles W. Mathews informs us in the Daily Telegraph that Lord Russell of Killowen was 'a writer and a reader,' and was 'omnivorous' of Shakespeare. Mr. T. P. O'Connor, on the other hand, writing in the Daily Mail, declares 'he was not a man who had any wide reading or any serious interest in letters.' Which is right? So far as general evidence goes, we imagine T. P. is. Save for a solitary contribution to an American review, the late Chief Justice was unknown as a contributor to the magazines; but Messrs. Macmillan & Co. published in volume form his striking speech at the Parnell trial, though that cannot be called a great incursion into the field of letters.

Early in the autumn Messrs. Hurst & Blackett will publish a new story by Miss Betham-Edwards. The scene is laid partly in Suffolk and partly in London. As was the case with 'The Lord of the Harvest,' these sketches of rural and semi-genteel City life are in the nature of reminiscence, and deal with social conditions now passed away.

To the September number of Scribner's Magazine Mr. W. D. Howells will contribute personal recollections of James Russell Lowell. We understand that Mr. Howells will give a fuller and more definite idea of Mr. Lowell than is likely to appear from any other pen.

A Transatlantic publisher has given an interviewer some particulars of the subscription method of selling books which is so much in vogue in the United States. It seems on the whole to work well; but the publisher acknowledges it appeals 'to an odd and scarcely meritorious instinct in man—namely, the love of seeing books upon his shelves, regardless of contents or quality, so long as the bindings are handsome and the cost not oppressive.' The instinct, however, is one by which the book trade distinctly benefits.

Early in the autumn Mr. T. Fisher Unwin will bring out a new novel entitled 'Vanity: the Confessions of a Court Modiste,' by Rita. The same publisher has in hand a story by Miss Mary E. Mann, called 'Among the Syrangas.' The tale deals with the life of a country clergyman.

From north, south, east and west obliging correspondents have written us regarding the note in our issue of the 4th about Cooper's 'Ned Myers.' There it was inadvertently stated that the book had never before been published. Our correspondents quote the 'English Catalogue,' that veritable storehouse of accurate information, against us. We should of course have said 'never before included in the collected edition of Cooper's Works.' The book first appeared, we believe, nearly sixty years ago, and since then, as the 'English Catalogue' proves, there have been several English editions of it. We can scarcely regret the mistake, seeing it has brought us so large a number of interesting and courteous letters from our friends in every part of the country.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are about to publish 'Model and Blackboard Drawing' and 'Ambidextrous Blackboard Drawing,' by F. F. Lydon, each fully illustrated by facsimile plates. ***

'The New Science and Art of Arithmetic' and 'The A B C of Arithmetic,' by Messrs. A. Sonnenschein and H. A. Nesbitt, M.A., will in future be published by Messrs. Adam and Charles Black.

New volumes in the 'Scott Library which will be ready at an early date are 'The Letters of the Younger Pliny,' translated, with an introductory essay, by John B. A contributor to the Outlook draws a dismal picture of the condition of 'the poor author' in these bustling times of war. A few eminent persons, he states, 'have written themselves into the enjoyment of a thousand a year,' and he once heard of a poet who kept a carriage. 'But take the author in the lump, look closely to his finances, nail him down to the facts about his receipts, and you will rub your eyes and bless the happy chance that sent you into physic or soap or your papa's bank, as the case may be.' It all depends, as young ladies say. If you take to 'literature' when Providence meant you for physic or soap or your papa's bank, then the end will be disaster, but if you have got the talent to write there is little fear of starvation. For it is the simple truth that the competition among publishers for good matter was never in the whole history of literature so keen as it is now. By 'good,' of course, we do not altogether mean literary excellence. Walter Pater wrote well, but he is not, nor ever was, popular. Mr. Meredith writes well, but it took 'Richard Feverel' twenty years to reach a second edition. Even to-day Mr. Meredith's name is not associated with flamboyant paragraphs concerning large advance payments or high serial rates. Such sweet items are for the purely commercial traffickers in literature. At the same time, a book must have a certain commercial value if a publisher, who is after all a man of business, is to put his imprint on it. On the other hand, we venture to say there is hardly a publisher in London who would not rather publish a work of sterling literary merit than a work of no literary merit at all if the good work had even a moderate chance of success. For reputation for excellence is just as much to a publisher as to an author.

The contributor to the Outlook knows certain 'rising young novelists' who figure in Mudie's Catalogue. Seeing that pretty nearly all who write fiction, good, bad, or indifferent, figure in Mudie's Catalogue, the distinction is not remarkable. What is remarkable is that the Outlook writer met one of those novelists the other day 'beamingly radiant because his publisher had let him have £10 on account of royalties in the matter of a story 80,000 words in length.' The statement is probably made in jest, but in case it should have been made in earnest we may remark that a novel which is supposed to be worth only an advance of £10 is worth nothing at all. We suspect, however, that the jubilant novelist belongs to the realm of imagination.

Mr. Hamlin Garland's new novel bears the striking title of 'The Eagle's Heart.' It will be published simultaneously on both sides of the Atlantic.

The Rev. C. Dudley Lampen's new story, to be published by Messrs. Everett & Co. next month, is entitled, 'Barcali the Mutineer: a Tale of the Great Pacific.' It deals with the discovery of a strange colony and the doings of a questionable chief-engineer.

A promising book of travel, to appear this autumn, is the account of the Antarctic Expedition of the Belgica, written by the only English-speaking member of her crew, Mr. Frederick A. Cook, who accompanied the expedition as surgeon, anthropologist, and photographer. The book will be elaborately illustrated from photographs, the first taken of the regions explored, and it also contains some coloured plates showing, among other things, the extraordinary colour and light effects observed. Mr. Heinemann is the publisher.

Messrs. Skeffington are bringing out a new book by the Rev. E. H. Sugden, entitled 'The Twentieth Century Parson.' The scenes are laid in Bradford, and many well-known Bradford characters of a past generation are introduced into the story.

Mr. George Manville Fenn, the author of 'With Bayonet in the Jungle,' a new serial story of adventure which will commence in the forthcoming number of Chums, has explained to the readers of that paper some of his methods of working. 'Occasionally,' he says, 'when I'm very much interested in a story, I dream portions of it, then I wake up and exclaim to myself, "Oh, that will do capitally for to-morrow." Unfortunately, however, I fall asleep again, and when I regain consciousness I have generally forgotten my dream. I don't believe in sticking to a story too long. I'm a rapid writer when I am in the mood, but if I were to sit up all night I should, to use a slang expression, become pumped out, the probability being that I should not be able to write again for a couple of days. The fact is I only work when the whim is on.'

On the 1st of September, Mr. John Long will have ready a sixpenny edition of Mrs. Lovett Cameron's popular novel, 'A Fair Fraud.'

The trade books and specialities of Messrs. Marlborough & Co. have previously been favourably mentioned in these columns. The value of their publications to newsagents, stationers, printers, and booksellers is undoubted.

It is said that the first soldier of his age, the present Commander-in-Chief of the Army in South Africa, is afraid of cats. Artists, poets, and literary people generally are supposed to be cat lovers. In the current number of St. Nicholas Miss Helen M. Winslow discusses the domestic pets of writers, and we learn that both Miss Mary Wilkins and Miss Sarah O. Jewett are both devoted to cats. Mr. W. D. Howells likes them 'on general principles,' but knows nothing of them, never having had 'a cat pet or otherwise.' Colonel Higginson, whose name is less familiar in this country than it deserves to be, 'confesses to a great fondness and admiration for cats.' Mr. C. D. Warner is also fond of them, as is likewise Mr. Edmund Clarence Stedman. In this country writers have invariably preferred dogs to cats. Scott's dogs are famous; but in these bustling times domestic pets are, it is to be feared, out of favour, and few English authors of note cherish either a dog or a cat.

Re SCOUGALL'S 'LIFE OF GOD IN THE SOUL OF MAN.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

DEAR SIR,—In a recent number of the British Weekly the above book was referred to in a letter of mine.

Evidently several members in the trade have thought the book was published by me, but such is not the case, the book having been issued by Mr. J. R. Smith, of Aberdeen, in 1892.

Your courtesy in allowing me to make this statement through your valuable medium will, I think, be esteemed by many besides

Yours faithfully,
HARRY R. ALLENSON.

THE AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

As briefly announced in our issue of last week, American publishers have formed an association similar in constitution and aims to the English Publishers' Association. A meeting was held in New York on July 25, when Mr. Charles Scribner presided, and Mr. Frank H. Dodd acted as secretary. For an account of the meeting we are indebted to the Publishers' Weekly.

Mr. Scribner said he did not think it necessary to dwell in detail upon the necessity of co-operation—that was patent to everyone present. In this age of centralisation, consolidation, and co-operation the book trade alone was unorganised and depending upon individual exertion to bring about reforms that it needed united effort to accomplish. He referred to what had been done by the book trade abroad, especially by the English publisher and bookseller, to eliminate abuses that were weakening the producer and his distributing agents. He felt certain that the book trade would prove itself equal to cope with a business issue, as it had by united effort finally met a moral issue and carried through the international copyright law. This had removed a stigma that had rested, and was bound to rest, upon the trade so long as it depended upon individual warfare against the evil. Mr. Scribner explained that the meeting had not been called to consider any particular grievance, but, in the first place, to determine whether an association of the publishing trade was desired by the majority. When that had been determined, proper steps might be taken in course of time to devise ways and means for removing some of the disabilities under which the trade was suffering. He for one was certain that the time was ripe to take action against certain practices that held the trade up to the derision of common sense business men. What these ways and means were to be was for the association to decide.

In order that the meeting might have a basis upon which to act Mr. Scribner requested Colonel G. B. M. Harvey to read a report that had been drawn up at a preliminary meeting, held July 24, by Charles Scribner, George P. Brett, and G. B. M. Harvey, as a temporary committee. The report outlines the purposes and organisation of the proposed American Publishers' Association as follows:—

Having been requested to act as a temporary committee for the purpose of outlining suggestions tending to the formation of an association of publishers, we beg to report, as a result of our deliberations, that, in our judgment, such an association, properly organised and conducted, would render a distinct service, not merely to ourselves as publishers, but to authors, booksellers, book purchasers, and, indeed, to everyone who is brought into contact directly or indirectly with the publishing business.

We regard our interests as identical with those of authors, book manufacturers, booksellers, and book buyers, and are convinced that association for mutual advantage can be made far more effective than individual effort to meet such changes in conditions as must necessarily arise in the production and dissemination of good literature. Lack of such co-operation has resulted in the growth of abuses which, although perhaps minor in importance, have nevertheless reached a point of distinct unfairness to both producer and consumer.

The exact method by which these well-known discriminations can be properly corrected or modified has not yet received sufficient consideration to warrant a distinct recommendation, but we see no reason to doubt that such a solution can be reached, if all concerned unite upon broad lines and with open minds in an endeavour to work out the problem.

We, nevertheless, recognise the fact that, in attempting a task of so much magnitude and involving so many diverse interests, it is essential to make haste slowly, for the reason that whatever is done must be necessarily of an experimental nature. Primarily and as a fundamental basis of success in all branches of the business the rights of all, but more especially of book writers and book buyers, must have adequate and satisfactory protection. Moreover, no publisher should, in our judgment, be expected or requested to join an experimental association without retaining full right of withdrawing from any arrangement proposed, without prejudice and at will, after having given suitable notice, until the beneficial results of such an association shall have become reasonably manifest.

We therefore recommend the following procedure:

First—That the chairman of this meeting appoint a committee of three to draft articles of association upon the lines proposed for submission to each of the publishing houses invited to this meeting, with the understanding that if a majority of such firms approve of the articles as presented the association shall be formed.

Second—We advise the incorporation in such articles of the following provisions:

That the control of the association be vested in the charter members.

That all firms originally enrolled be entitled to become charter members.

That the articles of association may provide, if deemed wise, for the election of associate members under such restrictions as may be deemed proper by the charter members.

That the management of the association be vested in a board of control of nine, composed of and selected by the charter members.

Third—For the purpose of making as much progress as possible at this meeting, we suggest that a committee on nominations, consisting of three of those present, be designated by the Chair, to propose to this meeting the names of nine members of the Board of Control for the first year and to propose members from such board to occupy for the same period the following positions, viz.: President, two Vice-Presidents, a Secretary, and a Treasurer.

Fourth—We further recommend that such preliminary expenses as may be incurred in the preparation, printing, and mailing of articles of association be borne pro ratâ by those present who express a desire to have such articles submitted for their consideration.

Fifth—We suggest that all present desirous of having such articles, when prepared, submitted to them now file their names with the Secretary, but no obligation whatsoever other than the pro ratâ proportion of preliminary expenses as above provided for shall rest upon any firm which shall not indicate its approval of the articles within thirty days after the date of submission.

We are well aware that these propositions are somewhat vague, but it has seemed to us that in order to produce the best results it is necessary, first of all, to fix a basis such as can be reached only through the building of the framework of an organisation such as we have outlined and now respectfully submit for your consideration.

The report was unanimously adopted, and the following firms filed their names with the secretary:—

D. Appleton & Co., New York.
Bowen-Merrill Company, Indianapolis.
Century Company, New York.
Henry T. Coates & Co., Philadelphia.
Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York.
Dodd, Mead & Co., New York.
Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York.
Harper & Brothers, New York.
Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.
John Lane, New York.
Lee & Shepard, Boston.
J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia.
Little, Brown & Co., Boston.
Longmans, Green & Co., New York.
[A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago.]
McClure, Phillips Co., New York.
The Macmillan Company, New York.
Thomas Nelson & Sons, New York.
G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.
James Pott & Co., New York.
Fleming H. Revell Company, Chicago and New York.
R. H. Russell, New York.
Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.
Silver, Burdett & Co., Boston.
Small, Maynard & Co., Boston.
Frederick A. Stokes Co., New York.

The chairman appointed Colonel Appleton, Frank H. Scott, and Frederick A. Stokes as a nominating committee, who reported the following nominations for the Board of Control: W. W. Appleton, George P. Brett, Frank H. Dodd, G. B. M. Harvey, Craige Lippincott, A. C. McClurg, George Mifflin, Frank H. Scott, and Charles Scribner. These nine gentlemen were elected to serve for one year. Officers to serve one year were elected as follows: President, Charles Scribner; Vice-Presidents, A. C. McClurg and George Mifflin; Secretary, George P. Brett; Treasurer, G. B. M. Harvey. Frank H. Dodd, Colonel Harvey, and George P. Brett were nominated by the President to draft articles of association for submission to the members at an early date.

EDUCATION—AS IT OUGHT NOT TO BE.

The results of latter-day education as revealed by examinations, if not always satisfactory, are frequently amusing. The Saturday Review records some of the answers given by pupils of the great public schools, some culled from school and army papers and some from university entrance examinations. One candidate remarks hopefully regarding the English constitution that 'it is a very comprehensive style of governing founded on the innumerable laws of England. In early Briton times there were no laws: but people walked about naked, and painted blew all over with wode. In Saxon times there were not above from six to a dozen laws altogether, wherefore there were not any lawyers needed. But now there are so many laws that men have to learn them for a business.' The facts here are not all that could be desired, but the sense is not so far amiss. Another engaging youth stated that 'The Diet of Worms is the grubs fed on by the blackbirds and thrushes, that will eat up the crops and fruits if they live longer. It is not very wise of a gardener, when he shoots the birds and smashes their nests and eggs.' He who produced the following might reasonably claim copyright in it, remarks the Saturday: 'A papal Bull gave you the alternitive of obedience or of being excommunicated from the privileges of the Church. It is a Bull, with reference to the horns of a Dilemma. So an Irish Bull is a choice—you may believe it, or you may not believe it.' This is definite—and new: 'The Five Mile Act was passed by Queen Victoria to prevent loafing and drunkenness in public-houses. People must prove that they had travelled five miles before they would be supplied with beer and spirits. This made people ashamed to get so drunk as before.' Who were the Pilgrim Fathers?—'The Pilgrim Fathers were the parents of the young men who took journeys to the Holy Land in the Crusades. They had to give an allowance to their godly sons while they were away in the east. But they never grudged it, because it was an honour to be a Pilgrim's father.' History, we know, is what the historian makes it, and the following will be recognised as an innovation: 'Sir Phillip Sydney gave the last drop of water in his jug to a dying soldier on the field of Waterloo, as was mentioned in the Duke of Wellington's despatches.' We fear Sir Herbert Maxwell failed to include those despatches in his 'Life of Wellington.'

Milton, we learn from another examinee, was 'the author of the freedom of the press. He is more famous as the master of Hobson, who managed his livery stables. You had always to hire the horse next the door of the stable, or go without a horse. That was Hobson's choice. Few names of William III.'s reign are so ilustrious as John Milton.' Another wrote: 'John Milton is the celebrated author of the excursion, and lived chiefly in the lake country near Carlyle.' The following concerning Shakespeare is interesting and original: 'William Shakespeare was a careless boy and a poacher almost before he was a man. He did better later on. He has written the Pilgrim's Progress, Macbeth, The Fairy Queen, and the Wealth of Nations. He is full of great sentences like proverbs. So when anyone speaks sort of learnedly, people cry out in fun—Shakespeare.'

Equally good is this definition of an interjection: 'An interjection is a shout or scream raised by a person too surprised or pained or frightened to make a sentence with his thoughts. It is not quite a human language. The lower animals say nothing else but interjections. Accordingly ill-natured and cross people by their interjections come very near to beasts.' A very average boy thus describes summer: 'Summer of course is a very pleasant season, when it is a good summer, and one has a country place to live in, near the seaside, or a nice river. Then to feel its niceness you must not be burdened with work. Work is double hard in summer, indeed three times harder. It has its own hardness—that is one. There is a fatiguingness of the heat of the air and of the broiling sun—that is two. Besides nobody, unless a scorcher on his cycle, wants to bustle or fag in summer—that is three. The games are quite enough for a schoolboy in summer, I can tell you. If a boy plays three matches of cricket, or rows hard in the river thrice a week in the afternoons of the half-holidays, he is not in it much for writing or reading stuff for the rest of his time.'

The following information is new if it should not be true: 'The Gulf Stream is a big flow of water. It starts from the Magnetic Pole at the north end of the British Empire. It reverbirates back and forward from there to the Strait of Gibraltar and the coast of Guinea twice and sometimes thrice a day. If you follow it close, you find plenty of herrings, haddocks, and cods sweeping along in it. This stream is a kind of gold mine to fishing vessels.' Another youth remarks that: 'The axis of the earth is like the spoke of an umbrella. No—rather of two opened umbrellas, without sticks. Join them together at the ends of the ribs, you will have the shape of a ball like the earth. If the umbrella globe was loose in the air like the earth, it would be spun the way the earth is on its axis by the magnetism jerking on the axis and working the globe round.' Here is a gem: 'The North-East Passage was a short-cut to India through the Suez Canal and the Isthmus of Panama. It is of little importance since America has been discovered.'

Concerning the tides one boy thus unburdened himself 'The tides are a fight between the earth and the moon. All water tends towards the moon, because there is no water in the moon, and nature abhors a vacuum. Gravitation at the earth keeps the water from rising all the way to the moon. I forget whether the sun joins in this fight.' This is lucid: 'A vacuum is nothing shut up in a box. They have a way of pumping out the air. When all the air and everything else is shut out, naturally they are able to shut in nothing, where the air was before.' A boy who will develop into a wit if he doesn't take care declares that 'a mammoth is a dead elephant that has kept fresh for 1,000 years, and perhaps for more. Dogs eat it as it comes out of the ice. It is more ancient than the oldest army preserved meat.' Certainly boys seem to acquire original and peculiar knowledge at some of our public schools.

TRADE CHANGE.

Mr. H. D. Crowe, of 92 Heaton Road, Newcastle-on-Tyne, bookseller, librarian, and newsagent, has taken into managership Mr. A. D. Brash (late with Messrs. R. J. Porteus & Co., Ltd., of the same city), and is now trading under the style of firm of Messrs. Crowe & Brash.

'THE DICTIONARY OF NATIONAL BIOGRAPHY.'

To the Editor of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR AND BOOKSELLERS' RECORD.

SIR,—Might I venture to make a suggestion through your columns to the publishers with regard to the above work? While no doubt it is to be found upon the shelves of most of our Free Libraries, it is by reason of its cost out of the reach of many students who would otherwise be glad to possess this, to them, indispensable work. Often, too, the nearest Free Library is some distance away. I have not one nearer than twenty-five miles or so. The issue of a cheaper edition, printed from the stereotyped plates, say at half the original price, viz., 7*s.* 6*d.* per volume, and issued in sets only on the instalment system of monthly payments, would bring it within the reach of those whose means are very limited, and should, I think and hope, considerably lessen the loss sustained by the publishers of this truly monumental undertaking.

Yours faithfully,
Bishop's Stortford: STUDENT.
August 3, 1900.

A MANIA FOR BIG WORDS.

A caustic critic, Mr. A. T. Vance, calls attention to the mania for big words among men of science, and gives some amusing examples. Thus: Mr. Herbert Spencer, in his 'First Principles,' the first volume of his Synthetic Philosophy, says that 'Evolution is an integration of matter and concomitant dissipation of motion; during which the matter passes from an indefinite incoherent homogeneity to a definite, coherent heterogeneity, and during which the retained motion undergoes a parallel transformation.' I can remember many years ago hearing an acquaintance reel off a remarkable paraphrase of that good old saw, 'People who live in glass houses should not throw stones.' This is the way he put it: 'Individuals inhabitating domiciles of crystalline structure should refrain from the projection of missiles of granite formation.'

The late George John Romanes was another scientist who fairly revelled in big words. He played with them, juggled them into sentences, and the average reader cannot help losing himself in the bewildering maze. Two examples from his 'Examination of Weismannism,' his best-known work, will illustrate the point. They are selected at random. Romanes in speaking of plant life says: 'All the multicellular organisms propagate themselves not exclusively by fission or gemmation but by sexual fertilisation.' Which translated into common English means that the higher plants multiply not only by division and buds, but by seed. A little further on Mr. Romanes speaks of the 'undifferentiated idio-plasm of the first ontogenetic stage.' Such words are simply staggering.

The other day I met with the word 'idiodactylae.' The Standard Dictionary defines it thus: 'A phalanx of coliomorpic oscine birds.' Of course, the meaning of the word was at once made clear. In some readings on entomological subjects I meet with the word 'planipennia,' which the Standard says is a name given to 'a suborder of neuropterous insects with multinervate wings and multiarticulate antennae.'

The definitions of scientific words in the Standard Dictionary, as may be inferred by the examples cited, are not characterised by extreme simplicity of language. The reader is informed that the 'acanthocephala' is the name given to an order of 'nematelminth worms without a mouth or intestinal canal, but with a retractile proboscis covered with hooks, comprising echinorhynchidae.' The 'arcturidae,' are a family of isopods with inferior operculiform uropods and with the anterior (4) pairs of legs ciliated and the posterior (3) ambulatory.' Taking up the study of shellfish, one finds that the rhopalodinidae are a 'family of diplostomidean holothurians, having a flask-shaped body.' 'Thanks,' says Mr. Vance, 'for the last three words. Most people know at least what a flask is like.'

Prof. Hyatt, in an article on the nautilus in the American Naturalist, tells us that 'the leading characteristic of parallelism in all genetic series of nautiloids is a tendency toward closer coiling and greater involution in the more specialised forms of each separate series and a correlative increase in the profundity of the impressed zone.'

Prof. Cope, in his 'Primary Factors of Organic Evolution,' tells his reader that 'in the first case, that of the human elbow, the cubitus was luxated posteriorly, so that the humeral condyles articulate with the ulna, anterior to the coronoid process.' The translator of Ribot's 'Psychology of Attention' tries to say that when we are very happy we forget our surroundings. He puts it in this way: 'Intense enjoyment produces a momentary unity of consciousness.'

Time was, concludes Mr. Vance, when a word to the wise was sufficient. Nowadays it must be a mighty long word or it will not do. Time was when the schoolboy could recite with satisfaction both to himself and his teacher:

> Little drops of water,
> Little grains of sand,
> Make the mighty ocean,
> And the pleasant land.

Nowadays, to meet the full requirements of polysyllabic science, he must paraphrase it thus:

> Infinitesimal particles of saline humective fluidity,
> Minute corpuscles of non-adhering inorganic matter,
> Conjointly cause to exist the unmeasurable expanse of aqueous sections,
> And the resplendent superficial area of dry solidity.

ENGLISH AND GERMAN METHODS OF EDUCATION.

In Germany the result of education has been to give to the efforts of the nation the solidification of a single organism. Stein, who conceived the German educational system, was also the parent of its military organisation. The confusion, cost, and fatuity of the English educational system are to be detected more clearly in the British army than elsewhere.

Germany is beating England out of the field because German education enables the German people to study things at their roots, to see things as they are, and to adapt their national methods to their national needs. German commerce now provides for the sustenance of 20,000,000 German people no longer dependent on the soil because German education has enabled all classes of the Kaiser's subjects to work together for a common end. In other words, the competition of Germany with England is the competition of an effective organism with a heterogeneous multitude of selfish and half-educated individuals. The blood and racial instincts of the English people are probably superior in quality to those of the Germans. English colonising capacity, courage, equanimity in defeat, and terrible power when aroused, all point to the essential soundness of the middle classes if only their energies were directed and their capacities trained in accordance with the modern needs of the empire. Britain waits for a Stein. The lads who are turned out of our great public schools learn, for the most part, to be gentlemen; that is to say, to avoid self-assertion, to consider others, to suffer pain in silence, and die like men when occasion requires; to tell the truth, and to excel in some form of manly sport. But they do not learn foreign languages or science in an effective form, although science and the interchange of thought with other nations are the head and the shaft of the spear that will alone enable Great Britain and her empire to maintain her stand as a World Power. The education of our naval officers is appallingly defective, and within a few years our navy will be tried as highly as the army.

The classes engaged in manual labour are educationally a long way behind the workmen and labourers of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Germany, the Protestant Cantons of Switzerland, and the United States. Even in France and Austria and parts of Italy the work of the handicraftsmen compares only too favourably with the work of the British artisan. The agricultural labourer in Britain is ceasing to exist. The Education Act of 1870, which was the conception of townsmen's brains, has raised ideals and formed ideas which have struck a blow at the heart of native agriculture. The educational system given them too late has brought into existence a crop of scrappy literature which shows the distaste of our people for consecutive thought, and the energy of people who cannot think consecutively is wasted. There is, however, more hopefulness in the educational survey for the democracy than for their rulers. During the present Parliament much has been done by tireless and almost unknown workers to improve the educational system. Few people know the priceless service rendered to the empire by the teaching staff of the Board Schools, who are worthily represented in the House of Commons by Mr. Yoxall, M.P. They are the salt of the earth. They get little praise and none of the prizes of public life, but their services are beyond praise. — ARNOLD WHITE in Sunday Sun.

AN OLD SCHOOL BOOK.

Before me lies a marvellously well preserved copy of a school book which has been in the family nearly a century. It is called 'An Easy Introduction to Astronomy for Young Gentlemen and Ladies,' by James Ferguson, F.R.S., seventh edition, illustrated with copper plates, and printed in 1804 at Glasgow by W. Lang for Grayer, Maver & Co., and for Vernor, Hood, Lackington & Co., and T. Ostell, London. An advertisement prefixed to the volume tells us: 'The design of the following treatise is to show that Young Gentlemen and Ladies may acquire a competent Knowledge of Astronomy without any previous knowledge of Geometry or Mathematics.' The repetition throughout the book of the title 'The Young Gentleman and Lady's Astronomy' should serve to show, even if the contents did not, that the fair sex put in no claim at the time it was published to the position it now holds. Once upon a time Sir Edmund Beckett Denison, now Lord Grimthorpe, wrote a book on 'Astronomy without Mathematics'; but it is certainly not similar in style to that of Mr. Ferguson, of which the following extracts may serve as samples. It may be as well to state that the volume contains ten lessons in the form of dialogues between Neander and his sister Eudosia:—

'Dialogue I. Neander: Good morrow, sister; this is an early visit. I have thought, for these few days since I came home, that you are anxious about something or other. Pray, may I ask what it is? Eudosia: Indeed, brother, I am,—but I am almost afraid to tell you what it is. N. Then you must think me much changed since I went to Cambridge. You know I have always loved and esteemed you on account of the goodness of your heart, which shone forth with the greatest lustre in the whole of your deportment. I am still the same as before except the improvement I have made at the famous university. . . . You know that you and I used to converse familiarly before I went thither: let us do so still. E. Dear brother, I cannot express how much you oblige me by this behaviour. I was afraid before to tell you my mind; but now I will. . . . What I want to learn cannot be done without taking up a great deal of your time; and perhaps you will think me vain in wanting to know what the bulk of mankind think our sex have no business with. N. Pray, Eudosia, what is that? E. It is nothing less than to be in some measure acquainted with the sublime science of Astron o my.

Other matters besides astronomy are dealt with in Mr. Ferguson's pages, where we find some glimpses of social life which are not without interest in these present days of wars and rumours of wars. 'I heard you was at Plymouth last year' (says Neander in the grammar of the period). 'Had you not then the curiosity to go aboard some of the ships there or at the Dock?' E. My papa and I went to the Dock, with a small party of gentlemen and ladies (sic). Mr. Falconer, who was master of the Belleisle, happened to be on the shore; and, observing that we were strangers, he most politely invited us to see his ship, which was then lying with many others in the Hamoaze. We most willingly accepted his invitation, and he took us out in his boat; showed us first into the cabin of the ship; and, as it was in the afternoon, he genteelly treated the gentlemen with wine and the ladies with tea; after which he showed us the whole inside of his ship of war. The way that the different apartments are laid out, and especially the powder-magazine, and how it is secured from being dangerous; the method of steering the helm, and many other things that I cannot well remember, was a sight not only highly entertaining but greatly surprising; and I could not help wondering how it was possible for the art of man to contrive and build such a wondrous huge machine, and how it could be managed and conducted through the pathless seas.'

On another occasion Eudosia is late in coming for her lesson. Neander asks: 'What is the matter? You look pale. E. I was taken ill last night about twelve, of an asthma . . . which keept me awake till five o'clock. Then it left me, and I fell asleep and oversleeped (sic) myself.' Then is given a recipe for an electuary against asthma. Strange and old-fashioned as the diction of this old school book seems to present day readers, it compares favourably with many dry-as-dust educational publications in the early years of the fast expiring century, and may have been to school girls and boys of those days a quite delightful guide in what Dr. Blimber termed 'our pilgrimage in the pleasant paths of knowledge.' Certainly many would prefer it to the favourite reading of the great Nonconformist preacher, Robert Hall, who, when a little boy, would divert himself after school hours with Entick's dictionary while seated in the graveyard adjoining his father's house at Arnsby. There can be no doubt as to the profit derivable from the study of dictionaries and grammars, a study deserving more attention on the part of some of our newspaper scribes. For instance, the following strange samples of English appeared in recent issues of one of our leading journals: 'The doyen of the diplomatic body expressed his heartiest congratulations (!) for the welfare of the royal pair.' 'Evidence is accumulating to show, &c.' On the question of training militia officers, one correspondent criticising another writes: 'I venture to differ with (sic) him as to the subalterns having been doing lessons' (!) In this connection we may recall a story told of George III. when not yet ten years old. One day his grandfather, George II., who was about to pay a visit to Hanover, sent Baron Steinberg to examine the children of Frederick, Prince of Wales, in their attainments. After the examination was over, the Baron said to Prince George he would tell his Majesty how proficient he was in Latin, but that he wished he were more perfect in German grammar, as it would be of signal use to him. 'German grammar! German grammar!' rejoined the little prince. 'Why any dull child can learn that!' We are not surprised that this reply gave great offence to the old monarch, who had unfortunately so imperfect a knowledge of the English language that he was unable to appreciate the beauties of the British drama, for which he professed a great admiration. But the king's dramatic taste could scarcely have ranked high; for we read that at a performance of Richard III., when Garrick played Richard, he thought the man who acted the lord mayor was by far the best member of the company, and repeatedly inquired of an attendant: 'Will not dat lor' mayor come again? I like dat lor' mayor; when will he come again?'

Much might be said on the subject of school books, both old and new; but limits of space forbid. If it be objected that I have wandered from my subject and quitted books for the stage, I may plead the example of one of our greatest living actors, who quitted books for the boards. But as Shakespeare truly says: 'All the world's a stage,' and for actors, whether young or old, upon the stage of life, the first and best of all school books is the Bible, and after that Shakespeare.

EDUCATION IN SOUTH AFRICA.

At a time when the eyes of the whole world are turned to South Africa an account of the state of education in that much discussed land is of particular interest. Mr. C. D. Hope, who has personal knowledge of his subject, writes in the University Correspondent of various phases of the educational question in South Africa. We learn that generally speaking the country does not train its professional men. 'Clergy, lawyers, doctors,' says Mr. Hope, 'are either immigrants from Europe or colonists who have graduated at a European university. To this rule there are, in the medical profession, absolutely no exceptions; for it is actually impossible to obtain any medical diploma within the length and breadth of South Africa. There exists on paper a scheme by which a year's work at the Somerset Hospital in Cape Town shall be accepted in place of the first year's course at Edinburgh or London. But even this has proved quite abortive, for the hospital staff do not want students who would leave before they were of any use, and the students themselves prefer to go home at once rather than waste a year at Cape Town, where the cost of living is very high. Edinburgh is thronged with Dutch and English colonial students, who have actually established there a South African Club; and parents, who can afford the additional expense, send their sons to walk the metropolitan hospitals and take their degrees at London or at Cambridge. Naturally enough, the African-born doctors, with their local influence and their knowledge of the Cape Dutch patois—or "Taal"—have a very great advantage over home-born men, who nevertheless come out in fairly large numbers. As the colonial students usually desire to obtain a general qualification only, it follows that the few specialists in the colony are home-born men.

'In the legal profession the predominance of colonial men is more marked, and there are more opportunities for qualification without European education. All the judges of the Cape Colony at this moment are of South African birth, but they are graduates of British universities and members of the Inns of Courts. Those colonial students who can afford it, besides working for a degree at a university and "eating their dinners" at the Temple, spend some months at least at one of the universities of Holland to improve their knowledge of the language and to study Roman Law. Yet there have been several examples of very successful barristers whose legal knowledge had been acquired by private study without ever leaving the colony. The attorneys, or—to use a phrase which they prefer—the "side-bar," have undoubtedly a much lower qualification than is exacted in England. The Cape University Matriculation Examination enables a clerk to serve his articles; and, after three years, a very elementary law examination gives the full qualification to practise as an attorney. The lowness of the standard and the profits of the profession cause its ranks to be filled too closely with colonists to leave any room for immigrants; though it is but fair to say that the best Cape Town firms are trying to improve matters by insisting that their clerks shall have passed the Cape University Intermediate Examination.'

CURRENT EDUCATIONAL LITERATURE.

Messrs. Asher & Co.—A well-known educationist recently expressed regret that more attention was not paid to the study of foreign languages in England, while in continental countries modern languages are, so to speak, part of every boy's education; an English boy may pass through our public schools, and in the end have but the merest smattering, let us say, of French or German. Messrs. Asher & Co. supply several books of great practical value to students of those languages. To 'Asher's Model Books of Foreign and Commercial Correspondence' we have already had occasion to refer in terms of praise. There are books in German, French, Italian, and Spanish, and in every instance the volumes are edited by competent scholars. The notes and glossaries cover all the difficulties which are likely to beset the ordinary student. 'Asher's International Reading Books' are prepared on the sensible principle that a child learns the more quickly the more it is interested. Of Flügel's 'English-German and German-English Dictionary' it is hardly necessary to speak, since it is already widely known as one of the best works of its kind in existence.

Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—An exceedingly useful library of Latin and Greek authors is supplied by 'Bell's Illustrated Classics,' edited by E. C. Marchant, M.A., late Classical Master at St. Paul's School. A feature of the series is that numerous illustrations, gathered from the best sources, are introduced; and in the work of preparation the main object, always carefully kept in view, has been to make the editions as interesting and helpful as possible to the intelligent learner. Maps and plans are included where necessary, and the volumes are also equipped with introductions, notes, grammatic appendices, and, in some of the prose authors, exercises on the text. They are issued in three forms: with Notes and Vocabulary, complete; without Vocabulary; and with Vocabulary, but without Notes. Other of Messrs. Bell's publications to which we may worthily direct attention are 'Bell's Illustrated Classics—Intermediate Series' and Bell's 'Illustrated Latin Readers,' both of which well merit the consideration of headmasters.

Messrs. A. & C. Black.—'A School Geography of the World,' by Lionel W. Lyde, M.A. This will be found a very useful little work, well adapted to the requirements of tuition. The Geometrical Drawing. With Notes and Examples. By W. H. BLYTHE, Jesus College. Part I. Plane and Elementary Solid. 2*s.* 6*d.* Part II. Solid or Descriptive Geometry. 2*s.*

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.—'Part I. contains Plane Geometrical Drawing and Solid Geometry, so far as it is included in the Syllabus, Geometrical Drawing (Art), Subject 1A, page 231, Science and Art Directory, 1899. In Part II. is added a course of instruction in Solid Geometry suited to the Elementary Stage of Science Subjects as given on page 78 of the above Directory. This book will also be found of use to all Army Candidates.'

Geometry for Young Beginners. An Introduction to Theoretical and Practical Geometry. By F. W. SANDERSON, Headmaster of Oundle School. 1*s.* 4*d.*

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS, CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

method followed has been to suggest in the introductory chapters 'certain important principles of the science that are obviously connected with the relation of man to the planet on which he lives'; and the author then proceeds to apply these principles at considerable length to areas that are likely to be specially familiar, and that are more than ordinarily interesting and important, such as the British Isles, British Empire, Europe, the United States, and Africa. The clear arrangement of the volume is one of its most commendable features, and can scarcely fail to be appreciated by those engaged in educational work.—The 'School Edition' of Sir Walter Scott's novels and poems issued by Messrs. Black has been already favourably spoken of in these columns. Recent volumes are 'Quentin Durward,' with Introduction and Notes, by H. W. Ord, B.A.; 'The Talisman,' with Introduction and Notes, by W. Melven, M.A.; 'The Lay of the Last Minstrel,' edited, with Introduction and Notes, by W. M. Mackenzie, M.A.; and 'The Lady of the Lake,' edited, with Introduction and Notes, by R. G. McKinlay, B.A. The general production of these volumes in regard to their suitability as educational manuals is excellent, and in no respect is this more marked than in the work of the different editors, whose notes are invariably interesting and instructive, while, at the same time, laudably brief. 'The Talisman' and 'Quentin Durward,' in company with 'Ivanhoe,' seem especially adapted of all Scott's novels for schoolboy use. The school text-books of this firm are, generally speaking, of a highly valuable kind. They embrace the subjects of geography, history, botany, zoology, chemistry, and English and French literature. We have already drawn attention to volumes of the 'School Waverley,' but other series meriting equal praise are 'Black's School Geography,' 'Black's Short Histories,' the 'Sea-dog Readers,' and 'Black's School Shakespeare.' All Messrs. Black's educational works have evidently been prepared by men of experience, who have spared themselves no pains in the matter of editorial labour.

Messrs. Blackie & Son have issued a new edition of 'The Concise Dictionary of the English Language,' by Charles Annandale. The dictionary, enlarged since the date of the first issue, is now as useful and handy a 'working dictionary' as the ordinary man could desire. In a note the compiler calls attention to the fact that 'while the price of the book has been reduced to a third of what it originally was, the matter in it has been considerably increased.' Moreover, revisions and corrections have been made. A supplement contains the words which have come into use during recent years.

Messrs. William Blackwood & Sons.—The series of Illustrated Classical Texts published by Messrs. Blackwood under the general editorship of Mr. H. W. Auden, of Fettes College, is for the practical purposes of the student excellently planned and carried out. The different volumes are edited by men whose names are a guarantee of sound scholarship, and it is gratifying to be able to state that the recognition of the scholastic world has been prompt and wide. Equally excellent are Blackwood's English Classics, a series which is under the editorship of Mr. J. H. Lobban, a former examiner in English in Aberdeen University. Masterpieces of English literature are presented in a manner so interesting that learners might almost forget they were learning in the pleasure of reading. Among the authors whose works are laid under contribution in this series are Carlyle, Macaulay, Goldsmith, Scott, Milton, and Cowper.

Cambridge University Press.—'Geometrical Drawing,' with Notes and Examples, by W. H. Blythe, M.A. Part I., Plane Geometrical Drawing. Part II., Solid or Descriptive Geometry. This work has been designed, in the words of its editor, for 'Candidates reading Geometrical Drawing for the Science and Art Department, South Kensington, for entrance to Sandhurst and Woolwich, and for the Cambridge Preliminary and Junior Local Examinations.' Part II. contains a course of instruction in Solid Geometry suited to the Elementary stage of science subjects as given on page 78 of the 'Science and Art Directory, 1899'; it will also be found of use to all Army Candidates, since the papers now given them contain Solid as well as Plane Geometry. Each part, it may be said, is published separately, and in order that the second volume may be thoroughly complete in itself, it has been found necessary to repeat from Part I. the greater part of Chapter XVI., and some of the examples. The work, which is one of the now well known 'Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges,' has evidently been prepared with every regard to clearness of exposition and practical teaching, and should by reason of these attributes be found of excellent service. Recent additions to the 'Pitt Press Series' include 'Cæsar De Bello Civili, Book III.,' edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Maps, by A. G. Peskett, M.A.; 'The Odyssey of Homer, Book XI.,' edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices, by J. A. Nairn, M.A.; Wilhelm Hauff's 'Der Scheik von Alessandria und Seine Sklaven,' edited, with Notes and Vocabulary, by Walter Rippmann, M.A.; and 'Old Mortality,' edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Glossary, by J. A. Nicklin, B.A. The very fact of these books being included in the 'Pitt Press Series' is a guarantee to all experienced scholars of their capable production, and in each case they will be found exceedingly helpful and instructive. A work of great importance, which we reviewed at considerable length on its first appearance, is 'The Education of the Young in the Republic of Plato,' translated into English with Notes and Introduction by Bernard Bosanquet, M.A., LL.D. To compare the scheme of education as laid down in the earlier books of Plato's Republic with our present-day system forms an exceedingly interesting study, and no doubt there are many ways in which we have receded rather than advanced. For one thing, nowadays too little attention is paid to home training; the life of the public schoolboy is largely cut off from social surroundings, and he lives practically in a little world of his own. 'But the Greek, or at least the Armenian boy, was a product of home training and the day school. Out of school hours, or in the leisure intervals at the gymnastic master's, he associated, on terms of due courtesy and subordination, with his older relatives and with his father's friends. There is no trace of his having been absorbed by a self-contained world of school interests and ambitions, and by a fierce esprit de corps colouring his entire view of life.' Mr. Bosanquet very ably contrasts the two styles, and in an introduction extending over some twenty odd pages (which is certainly not the least interesting portion of the book) writes of Greek education in the best days of Greece, education in Plato's Republic, and education after Plato's time. He then gives a translation of the last part of Book II., Book III., and Book IV. The entire volume is one of great educational value, and should prove of much interest in scholastic circles. Yet another work of special importance to our mind is the volume of 'Educational Aims and Methods: Lectures and Addresses,' by Sir Joshua Fitch, M.A., LL.D. The subjects dealt with are of a miscellaneous character, but all are of importance in a consideration of school work. Such, for instance, are Methods of Instruction as illustrated in the Bible, Socrates and his Methods of Teaching, the Evolution of Character, the Training of Reason, Hand Work and Head Work, Endowments and their Influence on Education, Ascham and the Schools of the Renaissance, the University Extension Movement and its relation to Schools, the Sunday School of the Future, and so on. All these and other topics are treated by the author with a fluency and practical insight which apparently gain in their effect from the lecture-form in which the essays were originally prepared. It is, perhaps, hardly necessary to say that the author's long experience of educational work as a Government Inspector of Schools, to say nothing of his previous books, entitles him to speak with the utmost authority. For the Cambridge and Oxford 'locals' in December next and the ensuing year the Cambridge Press have prepared a number of books. These include in the Pitt Press series Malot's 'Remi en Angleterre,' edited by Mrs. Verrall; Mérimée's 'Colomba,' edited by A. R. Ropes; Racine's 'Athalie,' edited by H. W. Eve; Freytag's 'Der Staat Friedrichs des Grossen,' edited by W. Wagner; Goethe's 'Hermann und Dorothea,' edited by W. Wagner and J. W. Cartmell; Klee's 'Die deutschen Heldensagen (Hagen und Hilde, und Gudrun),' edited by H. J. Wolstenholme, and a large number of English, Greek, and Latin classics. The firm has also prepared various works in Greek and Latin classics for the London Matriculation Examinations, Oxford and Cambridge Certificates, and Welsh Intermediate. The Cambridge University Press has recently added a number of volumes to the Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges. These include 'Ovid: Selections from the "Tristia,"' edited with Notes and Vocabulary by H. F. Morland Simpson, M.A.; 'The "Anabasis" of Xenophon: Book V.,' edited with Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary by G. M. Edwards, M.A.; 'The "Æneid" of Virgil, Book V.,' edited with Notes and Vocabulary by A. Sidgwick, M.A.; 'Cæsar, De Bello Gallico, V.,' edited with Notes and Vocabulary for Beginners, by E. S. Shuckburgh, M.A.; and 'Geometrical Drawing: with Notes and Examples,' by W. H. Blythe, M.A. All are carefully and excellently prepared, the requirements of the students to whom they are addressed being borne in mind at every point and in every particular. The same publishers bring out 'M. Tulli Ciceronis Oratio de Imperio Cn. Pompei (Pro Lege Manilia),' with Introduction and Notes by J. C. Nicol, M.A. This is one of the 'Pitt Press' series, and has been principally prepared for younger students who are making acquaintance with Cicero for the first time. In his method of treatment the author shows a considerable knowledge of the needs of ordinary students, and his edition of this oration should prove of much service to young learners generally. Other recent issues in the 'Pitt Press' series comprise 'The Odyssey of Homer, Book IX.,' edited with Introduction, Notes, and Appendices by J. A. Nairn, M.A., and 'Der Scheik von Alessandria und seine Sklaven, von Wilhelm Hauff,' by Walter Rippmann, M.A. Both these little books have been excellently prepared, and in the matter of text, notes, and general information are all that the most diligent student could desire. 'The Making of Character: some Educational Aspects of Ethics,' by John MacCunn, M.A., LL.D., which we noticed on its first appearance, is divided into four parts. The first treats of Congenital Endowment—its nature and treatment: the second considers the question of Educative Influences; the third has to do with the subject of Sound Judgment; while the fourth is devoted to a consideration of the important topics of Self-Development and Self-Control. Under these respective headings such minor bearings of the main subject as heredity, vital energy, temperament, habit and its limitations, bodily health, social influence, example, &c., are discussed. The work is so planned out as to take the life of the individual from its earliest years until he has reached maturity of thought and self-reliance. The subject is treated in an extremely able fashion, and the volume is not only interesting but of great value as an educative factor. It forms one of the well-known 'Cambridge Series for Schools and Training Colleges.'

Messrs. Cassell & Co.'s New Educational Works include an important new series of readers written by Arabella Buckley, Author of 'Life and Her Children,' 'The Fairy Land of Science,' &c., with original illustrations and coloured plates. 'The Troubadour,' edited and annotated by Phillip Gibbs, Author of 'Founders of the Empire.' The poetry in this book has been selected with a view to being specially suitable for dramatic recitation. The collection included pieces by such writers as Tennyson, Rudyard Kipling, W. S. Gilbert, Robert Louis Stevenson, Browning, &c. 'A Practical Method of Teaching Geography,' by J. H. Overton. Part II. of the new part includes Agricultural Industries, Seaports, Sectional Maps, and Continental Connections with the British Isles. The first part of this work has already been reprinted. 'Our Great City, or London the Heart of the Empire,' by H. O. Arnold Forster, with 40 full-page illustrations, printed on plate paper, and numerous illustrations in the text. In addition to the school edition of this work a presentation edition, handsomely bound in cloth, has been prepared. A presentation edition will also be issued of Mr. Arnold Forster's 'History of England,' of which a third edition has been recently published. In their well-known Polytechnic Series a new and revised edition is in preparation of 'Forty Lessons in Engineering Workshop Practice,' by C. F. Mitchell and E. G. Davey. Mr. G. R. Parkin's work, 'Round the Empire,' has now passed its hundredth thousand, the reprint recently printed making the hundred and tenth. Messrs. Cassell have also ready a new edition, revised by Mr. James Boïelle, B.A., of 'Cassell's Lessons in French,' by Louis Fasquelle, LL.D., Professor De Lolme, and Professor E. Roubaud, B.A. The type has been reset, a larger fount being used, and in other ways the work has been brought up to the present-day standards. It is now thoroughly adapted for the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations, the College of Preceptors' Examinations, and in the various Polytechnic and other institutions where evening instruction is carried on. A second edition of Mr. Gibb's 'Founders of the Empire' is now in the press.

Mr. W. B. Clive.—Year by year the books issued from the University Correspondence College Press increase in number, thus proving in the clearest manner their usefulness. Among the later works published by the firm is 'The Matriculation History of England,' by C. S. Fearenside, M.A. It is intended primarily for candidates for the London Matriculation (in so far as English history is concerned), but it is hoped will be found useful by students for other examinations. The book is distinguished by the same commendable attribute that distinguishes most of the University Correspondence Press educational guides—a desire to supply the reader with just that amount of practical information which is necessary to enable him to pass an examination, without burdening his mind with unnecessary detail. This undoubtedly is what is required. The book is above all things practical. The author knows exactly what is wanted and supplies it in the form best adapted to the needs of the students for whose use it is intended. Other recent publications from the same firm include 'Aeschylus: Prometheus Vinctus,' with introduction and notes, edited by F. G. Plaistowe, M.A., and J. R. Mills, M.A.; 'Isocrates: De Bigis'—the subject set for the Intermediate Examination (1901) of the Cape of Good Hope University, and the only edition, we believe, with English notes—edited by W. J. Woodhouse, M.A.; and 'The London Matriculation Directory,' containing, amongst other useful matter, articles on the special subjects for June 1900 and January and June 1901. These volumes being prepared by experts cannot fail to be of great assistance to students. 'Latin Composition,' by A. H. Allcroft, M.A., and J. H. Haydon, M.A., has gone into a fifth edition, a fact not at all surprising considering the excellence of the work. The matter has been carefully revised and reset throughout, but the paragraph numbers have not been interfered with. The volume is calculated to be of the utmost assistance to the young student. The 'Tutorial Latin Grammar,' by B. J. Hayes, M.A., and W. F. Masom, M.A., has reached a fourth edition. The book is arranged in such clear and intelligible form as shall be of the greatest advantage to the student, without burdening his mind with a number of old-fashioned forms and usages. Nothing that is of practical consequence is omitted, but it has been endeavoured as far as possible to simplify the subject, and to render its comprehension a matter of easy achievement. As we have already had occasion to remark, the books issued by the Correspondence Press fall into three divisions: the Preceptors' Series, the University Tutorial Series, and the Organised Science Series. The Preceptors' is intended more especially for College of Preceptors' Examinations, and is in general up to the standard of second-class examinations of the college. It also satisfies the requirements of the Oxford and Cambridge Junior Locals. The Tutorial Series consists of text-books of mathematics, philosophy, science, modern languages, and classics. The standard varies with the standard of examination for which the books are severally written. But whether intended for elementary examinations or for those of a more difficult nature, the books without exception are, as we have more than once pointed out, notable for accuracy of information, excellence of arrangement, and the clearness and concision with which they are written. The value of the books bearing the firm's imprint is shown, not only by the number of new works brought out, but still more by the number of new editions. Thus there is a constant demand for Mr. W. H. Low's 'English Language: its History and Structure,' a book which traces the history of our literature from the time of the Saxons down to the year 1832. The great general tendencies of the periods are very clearly summarised, and judicious care has been exercised in the selection of details. Another work constantly in demand is 'General Elementary Science,' edited by Mr. Briggs; and Professor Mackenzie's excellent 'Manual of Ethics,' which we reviewed on its first appearance, is also selling steadily. For the College of Preceptors' Examinations the firm issues a number of specially-prepared books in all departments. The latest issues in the Organised Science Series include, for the Elementary Stage: 'First Stage Mechanics (Solids),' by F. Rosenberg, M.A., B.Sc., 2nd edition; 'First Stage Mechanics of Fluids,' by G. H. Bryan, Sc.D., and F. Rosenberg, M.A., B.Sc., 2nd edition; 'First Stage Sound, Light, and Heat,' by John Don, M.A., B.Sc.; 'First Stage Magnetism and Electricity,' by R. H. Jude, M.A., D.Sc., 2nd edition; and 'First Stage Inorganic Chemistry (Theoretical),' by G. H. Bailey, D.Sc., Ph.D. (Heidelberg), edited by Wm. Briggs, LL.D., M.A., F.C.S. In the Second Stage are comprised 'Second Stage Mathematics,' being the Additional Algebra and Euclid with the Trigonometry required for the Second Stage, edited by Wm. Briggs, LL.D., 2nd edition; 'Advanced Mechanics,' by Wm. Briggs, LL.D., and G. H. Bryan, Sc.D., Vol. I., Dynamics, 2nd edition; 'Advanced Mechanics,' by Wm. Briggs, LL.D., and G. H. Bryan, Sc.D., Vol. II., Statics, 2nd edition; 'Advanced Heat,' by R. Wallace Stewart, D.Sc., 2nd edition; 'Advanced Magnetism and Electricity,' by R. Wallace Stewart, D.Sc.; and many more. The special books for the London University Matriculation Examinations in January and June next year include 'Vergil—Aeneid,' Book II., by A. H. Allcroft, M.A., and T. R. Mills, M.A.; 'Sallust—Catiline,' by T. M. Neatby, M.A., and B. J. Hayes, M.A., 2nd edition; and 'Lucian—Charon and Timon,' by T. R. Mills, M.A. There are also specially prepared books issued by the University Tutorial Press for the Royal University of Ireland Examinations, the Examinations for Teachers' Certificates both for England and Scotland next year, and the Central Welsh Board Examinations. 'First Stage Botany, as Illustrated by Flowering Plants,' by Alfred J. Ewart, D.Sc., F.L.S. A large amount of botanical knowledge, suitable to the requirements of students preparing for the elementary stage of the South Kensington Science and Art Examinations, has been compressed into this volume, without detriment to its clearness and practical usefulness. A large number of illustrations are given. The author throughout shows a keen knowledge of the best methods of arousing the interest of the student and impressing upon his memory the main facts of the subject. 'First Stage Hygiene,' by Robert A. Lyster, B.Sc. Lond. This is a companion volume to the preceding, both being in the 'Organised Science Series,' and, like it, it is intended for the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department. Commencing with a consideration of the general structure of the body, the author has divided his subject into what may be termed its logical sequence, first giving the physiology, and then discussing that section of Hygiene to which it may be considered an introduction. Thus a description of the heart and the respiratory system naturally leads to the subject of ventilation, amount of air required, methods of ventilation, &c., while a knowledge of the digestive system is a prelude to the consideration of diet, cooking, and liquid refreshments, including alcohol. The book is well illustrated with diagrams. In the 'University Tutorial Series' we have received 'The Satires of Horace,' edited by B. J. Hayes, M.A., and F. G. Plaistowe, M.A.; 'Lysias: Eratosthenes and Agoratus,' edited by J. Thompson, M.A., and T. R. Mills, M.A.; 'Lucian: Charon and Timon,' edited by T. R. Mills, M.A.; a translation of the same by T. R. Mills; and 'Herodotus: Book II.,' a translation with test papers, by J. F. Stout, B.A. Each of these volumes well sustains the high reputation of the series, and in the case of the three first-named books the text is accompanied by serviceable notes.

Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Laboratory Note-Book for Chemical Students,' by Vivian B. Lewes and J. S. S. Brame, is of a thoroughly practical character. It supplies the student with note-book that shall furnish him with all the necessary details for the working out of experiments, whilst leaving to his own solution as far as possible the theoretical explanation of the chemical reactions that ensue. By means of interwoven blank pages the student is laudably encouraged to make notes of the results he obtains and his explanation of the means by which he achieves them.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—Within the past year Messrs. Dent have produced several works of great educational value. To the ordinary student, perhaps, the most interesting, probably also the most useful, will be 'The History of Language,' by Henry Sweet, M.A. Clearness of statement and adequacy of illustration are conspicuous features of the style in which it is written. The brief sketch of the structure of the Aryan family of languages and the discussion of its affinity to other families of languages cannot fail to give greater definiteness and concreteness to the reader's impressions; and, in the words of the preface, 'will serve both to widen the reader's linguistic horizon and to prepare him to follow problems which cannot be ignored much longer.' While rigidly excluding antiquated views, Mr. Sweet is very cautious in admitting new ones. 'And yet,' as he says, 'there is a time for pure hypothesis, and a place for it even in an elementary book.' Accordingly he does not hesitate to embody in this manual original views merely because they are antagonistic to those held by other philologists of note. They are the results of a lifetime of study, and, even should they turn out untenable, 'they will still serve to stimulate the reader's imagination.' For interest to the general reader, and as a trustworthy guide to the student of the principles of comparative philology, Mr. Sweet's book cannot be too highly commended.

Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'In Agricultural Botany: Theoretical and Practical,' John Percival, M.A., the author has endeavoured very successfully to sift that amount of botanical knowledge which is valuable to the agriculturist from the general mass of the subject, his method being founded on the experience gained by many years' teaching and lecturing to students, practical farmers, and gardeners. The book, clearly and concisely written thoroughout, supplies a helpful contribution to the subject of botany, treated from the agricultural student's point of view.

The Gresham Publishing Co. have brought out a new edition of 'Ogilvie's Imperial Dictionary,' edited by Dr. Charles Annandale. The four volumes of which it consists are generously illustrated. The work is issued on the instalment plan, as is also the 'Modern Cyclopædia,' in eight volumes.

Messrs. W. & A. K. Johnston have issued a number of wall maps that are assured of much appreciation for school purposes. In the 'Imperial' series the subjects are Africa, America, Asia, England, Ireland, Scotland, United States, World in Hemispheres, and World (Mercator). We may also direct attention to their 'National School Board' series of large wall maps, which are extensively used, we understand, throughout the British Colonies and the United States of America, and have been adopted by most of the School Boards and public educational establishments at home. The series consists of over seventy maps, each of one uniform size, 50 by 42 inches; and a feature of the publication is that a handbook, expressly written, accompanies every map. In their other specimens of school chartography Messrs. Johnston well sustain the high reputation they have obtained for accuracy, excellence of production, and moderate price.

Messrs. Crosby Lockwood & Son.—'French Polishing and Enamelling: a Practical Work of Instruction, including numerous recipes for making Polishes, Varnishes, Glaze-Lacquers, Revivers, &c., by Richard Kitmead. In years not so long gone by the method most ordinarily used for polishing furniture was by rubbing with beeswax and turpentine or with linseed oil. Now all that is changed, and with the advent of French polishing a remarkable revolution has taken place in this branch of industry. Mr. Kitmead's volume provides not only an interesting but practically useful manual on the subject. The gradual growth of French polishing in all its varied processes and manipulations is traced, and an account of the different materials that are employed is given, while a number of valuable recipes adds further efficiency to the work. The arts of staining and imitation are also fully treated, and indeed there is no department in connection with the subject of French polishing that does not come in for its due measure of treatment. The book will be found of excellent value, not only to the professional polisher, but to the amateur and collector of furniture generally. De Fivas's French Class Books are now so well known and thoroughly appreciated by the teaching profession as to call for no further recommendation at our hands. The fact that each volume has run into many editions speaks eloquently in favour of their general utility. A new edition, revised and brought up to date, has been issued of 'A Handbook of English Literature,' originally compiled by Austin Dobson, but now under the care of Professor W. Hall Griffin, who has written several fresh chapters. It is an excellent work, of which we can speak in terms of the highest praise. Several volumes on 'Commercial Education,' issued by Messrs. Lockwood, will well repay attention, and we should also favourably mention their excellent 'Civil Service Handbooks.'

Messrs. Longmans & Co.—That the educational works issued by Messrs. Longmans are in the best sense successful is evidenced by the numerous editions that have been published of most of them. Thus 'The Elements of Grammar and Composition, including the Analysis of Sentences Simplified for Beginners,' has reached a nineteenth edition; 'A First Book of English Grammar, Geography, and English History' has been issued in ten editions; while 'The School Euclid' has run into sixteen editions. These facts very forcibly testify to their value. Other old and highly appreciated friends are 'The Illustrated Public School Speaker and Reader,' and the two volumes that contain 'Lessons in Elocution and Expressive Reading,' for boys and girls respectively. Useful editions of 'Xenophon's Anabasis, Books I. to III.' and 'Cæsar's Commentaries on the Gallic War,' are also included. A Student's Edition of Mr. Gardiner's magnificent 'History of England' is now published in one volume, and Cyril Ransome's 'Short History of England' is issued in two parts. To praise these works would be superfluous. The same remark applies to the Greek and Latin Classics prepared for students by Mr. Arthur Sidgwick, Mr. H. R. Heatley, and Dr. Kennedy; also to the Mathematical works of Mr. Hamblin Smith.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Standard Polyphase Apparatus and Systems,' by Maurice A. Oudin, will prove of much interest and practical value to all who are concerned in electrical engineering. It affords full and reliable information as to the characteristics and uses of the various types of polyphase apparatus and their practical working. As this system has been largely developed within recent years, attaining a position of the utmost importance, an up-to-date guide on the subject should be exceedingly welcome. The author thoroughly explores every branch of the science, discoursing at length of generators, induction motors, rotary converters, static transformers, station equipment, the two and three phase systems, and other topics; and throughout his work he has evidently always borne in mind the requirements of those who are practically interested in the transmission of power by polyphase currents. The book is well illustrated with diagrams and plates. 'Instruction in Photography,' by Sir William De W. Abney, K.C.B., D.C.L., F.R.S., has reached a tenth edition. The work has been thoroughly revised and brought up to date, chapters being added on photo-block work, three-colour printing, &c., &c. Attention has also been paid to the theoretical side of photography, and additional information introduced on the subject of lenses. The volume in short is a complete and exceedingly useful treatise on photography, traversing in a clear and lucid manner every branch of the subject, and written by an expert. There are chapters on the action of the spectrum, the theory of development, phenomena in development, the dark room and its fittings, lenses and shutters, preparation of the plates, gelatino-bromide paper and films, defects in gelatine negatives, wet-plate photography, collodion dry-plate processes, production of transparencies and enlargements, artificial lighting, theory of silver printing, preparation of sensitive papers, the platinotype printing process, mounting prints, the carbon process, photo-lithography and zincography, photo reliefs and photo-engraving, half-tone blocks, and indeed every detail of the subject. It is a work that no student of photography should be without, clearly expressed, admirably arranged, and thoroughly practical in all its teaching. A work of great educational and practical value in the present crisis of England's history is 'Mechanical Traction in War for Road Transport, with Notes on Automobiles generally,' by Lieut.-Col. Otfried Layriz, of the German Army, translated by R. B. Marston. Commencing with some remarks on the necessity of mechanical traction and its many advantages, the author proceeds to give a history of the gradual incoming of the road engine, its first use in war, &c., and remaining sections are devoted to a consideration of the automobile without train, the automobile as traction engine, the adaptability of the motor car to this form of service, the attempts that have been made to replace the steam motor by other kinds of motors, the relation of supply transport by means of traction engines to that by field railways, and the necessity that exists for mechanical road traction being general in a country before it can be usefully applied in time of war. It should be mentioned that the translator, Mr. R. B. Marston, has added some very interesting and illuminative footnotes, as well as a reference in the Appendix to the use of the traction engine in the South African War, and that the illustrations have been amplified by some valuable pictures of early road engines and carriages, which testify in very conclusive manner to the great improvements that have been effected of late years. 'German Prepositions at a Glance,' by C. Kaiser and A. Thouaille. This is an attempt to set forth practically and clearly the German prepositions through a series of objective sentences illustrated by graphic pictures. It is generally thought that one of the greatest difficulties which learners of the German language experience is the right use of the cases governed by the different prepositions. 'Jackson's German Writing Copy-book for Pupils Learning the German Language.' The headlines are in the German characters, and will be found sufficient to impart an elegant and accurate style of German handwriting. 'Stars and Telescopes,' by David P. Todd, is intended to meet the demand for a plain, unrhetorical statement of the astronomy of to-day, and contains many instructive illustrations. Already a new edition of this valuable work has been called for. In the study of German, Spanish, Swedish, French, Italian, Russian, and Dutch, few manuals could be found of greater assistance than those issued under the title of the 'Method Gaspey-Otto-Sauer,' at Heidelberg, by Herrn Julius Groos, for whom Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. are the agents in this country.

Messrs. Macmillan & Co.—'Elementary Physics and Chemistry,' Second Stage, by R. A. Gregory, F.R.A.S., and A. T. Simmons, B.Sc. We have here the second of the three volumes projected by the authors, and containing a course of experimental work on the elementary principles of physics and chemistry. The subjects dealt with, as the authors point out, were introduced into the Code of the Board of Education two years ago for instruction in the upper standards of Public Elementary Schools, and are also included in the course of Practical Science prescribed for the Evening Continuation Schools. We need only say of this volume that it has the same qualities of excellence which distinguished the preceding volume in the same series—that is to say, it is eminently practical and up to date, and therefore excellently suited to the needs of students preparing for examinations. Few manuals possess so great an educative value as those included in 'Siepmann's French and German Series.' These are divided into two sets respectively intended for 'elementary' and 'advanced' students. In the former we have received 'L'Emeraude des Incas,' by Charles Normand, adapted and edited by the late F. Aston Binns, M.A., and 'Herr Walther von der Vogelweide: eine Geschichte aus der Zeit der Minnesänger für die Jugend erzählt von Theodor Ebner,' adapted and edited by E. G. North, M.A.; while in the advanced texts we have Edmond About's 'Le Roi des Montagnes,' adapted and edited by Ernest Weekley, M.A. All these little works are carefully prepared, and their contents are well adapted for the purposes of tuition. Those who are wishful to study Books VII.-XII. of 'The Æneid of Virgil' could scarcely make use of a better edition than that edited by T. E. Page, M.A., who is well known for the part he has taken in preparing other volumes of the classics. It is neatly bound, well printed on good paper, and is crowded with helpful notes. The 'Outline of English Grammar,' by J. C. Nesfield, M.A., is an admirable little manual which supplies, in concise and well arranged form, all the necessary rules in regard to Accidence, Parsing, Analysis of Sentences, Conversion of Sentences from one form to another, Sequence of Tenses, &c. There are also a number of exercises. In regard to verse we can recommend for school use the two neatly produced volumes: 'From Blake to Arnold: Selections from English Poetry (1783-1853),' edited by J. P. Pichtrom, B.A., LL.B., and J. le Gay Brereton, B.A., with Introduction, Critical Essays and Notes, by C. J. Brennan, M.A., and 'Tennyson: The Lotos-Eaters, Ulysses, Ode on the Death of the Duke of Wellington, Maud, the Coming of Arthur, and the Passing of Arthur,' with Introduction and Notes by F. J. Rowe, M.A., and W. T. Webb, M.A. We have already drawn attention to the excellence of 'Specimens of Modern French Prose,' edited with biographical and critical notes by H. E. Berthon. The object of the author has been to produce a French reading book which shall ensure sustained interest without undue length, and be varied in its contents without 'scrappiness.' No extracts, therefore, are given, but every piece is a complete tale. The authors laid under contribution are Honoré de Balzac, Alfred de Vigny, Alexandre Dumas, Prosper Mérimée, Erckmann-Chatrian, Théophile Gautier, André Theuriet, François Coppée, Ludovic Halévy, and Paul Bourget. We have only to add that the volume is excellently adapted for its purpose, and in the matter of type, paper, and general 'get-up' could scarcely be improved upon. We should also award a word of high praise to Mr. Berthon's notes. 'La Tour des Maures,' par Ernest Daudet. Adapted and edited by A. H. Wall, M.A. ('Siepmann's Elementary French' series), by the elder brother of the distinguished author of 'Tartarin' is well adapted for purposes of French tuition, and has been excellently 'treated' by Mr. Wall. In addition to the text, there are a brief introduction giving some details of the author's life, several pages of useful notes, a list of irregular verbs, vocabulary, and three appendices bearing on the practical teaching afforded by the story, by the general editors, Otto Siepmann and Eugène Pellissier. The book should be found extremely useful for the purpose intended. 'An Elementary French Grammar,' by G. Eugène Fasnacht, is lucid and simple in arrangement, and admirably practical in detail. It simplifies the most difficult phases of French construction that can trouble the beginner, and in all respects makes his path clear before him. It should undoubtedly be of the utmost service in elementary schools. 'First Book Home Geography and the World as a Whole,' by Ralph S. Farr and Frank M. McMurry. This work is the first of a series of three volumes, the second dealing with North America and the third with Europe and the other continents. It is a carefully prepared, well-arranged book, likely to be of value in educational work, and the coloured maps and numerous other illustrations form an important factor in its influence, the latter lending a very necessary element of lightness and variety. We should add that a very neat and appropriate binding distinguishes the volume. 'Combined Readers in Elementary Science and Geography,' Books II. and III., by Vincent T. Murché. These little books, as we have had occasion to point out, fulfil all the requirements of a good reader. The matter is suitably displayed to catch the young pupil's attention, paper and printing are alike excellent, and the coloured and other illustrations render the volumes even still more attractive. The child who does not learn under such favourable conditions must be a dolt indeed—or preternaturally unimaginative and lazy. 'Outline of English Grammar,' by J. C. Nesfield, M.A.; 'Courtesy: a Reader for Older Boys and Girls,' by H. E. Norton; 'Dryden: The Hind and the Panther,' by W. H. Williams, M.A. These are other of the exceedingly useful works prepared by the publishers for educative purposes. Each is splendidly adapted for the respective object in view, and in the case of Mr. Williams's volume some highly helpful notes are appended. Few new issues of old books will be more welcome than the New Edition of the late Professor Huxley's 'Lessons in Elementary Physiology.' It has been prepared under the direction of Professor Michael Foster and Dr. Lea. At this date it is scarcely necessary to speak of the many merits of the book; we need only say that in the general character of the volume it preserves all its old excellencies, while infinitely improved we think in its minor features by the overhauling it has received. Among educational works of the better class may be reckoned 'Byzantine History in the Early Middle Ages: the Rede Lecture delivered in the Senate House, Cambridge, June 12, 1900,' by Frederic Harrison, M.A., which Messrs. Macmillan recently published in a handy form. The author has treated his subject with all the power and skill that one would naturally expect from him. It is, so far as its limits will permit, an exceedingly able exposition of early Byzantine history, and is certain to be read by students of this period with the greatest interest.

UNIVERSITY TUTORIAL PRESS (University Correspondence College Press)

Messrs. Methuen & Co.—The works in Greek and Latin classics prepared by Mr. A. M. M. Stedman are so well known to the scholastic profession that we need do no more than notice the new editions as they appear. We are glad to see that the little volume, 'First Latin Lessons,' has reached a fifth edition, and that 'Initia Latina,' the 'First Latin Reader,' and 'Easy Latin Passages for Unseen Translation' are the first two in their fourth editions and the last in its sixth edition. Such success is the best criticism that can be passed on the books. Equally serviceable, and almost equally successful, are the various works in Greek and French edited by Mr. Stedman. For the School Examination Series the same editor brings out some extremely useful little books, containing examination papers and miscellaneous examples in French, Latin, Greek, and German, and in History and Science. The Classical Translation Series, edited by Mr. H. F. Fox, Fellow of Brasenose College, Oxford, are in every instance practical and lucid. An important series issued by Messrs. Methuen is the Text-Books of Technology. We have noticed many of these excellent handbooks as they appeared, and can recommend them without any qualification. 'Commercial Law,' by W. Douglas Edwards, LL.B., is a particularly concise and clever little treatise. It is divided into four parts, respectively devoted to a consideration of the general principles of contract law, commercial contracts, commercial relations between persons, commercial property and securities, and legal remedies. The writer has a lucid style, which, in the explanation of the intricacies of his subject, serves him in good stead. Considering its size, it is one of the most useful little manuals we know of.

Mr. Thomas Murby.—This publisher has issued a ninety-fifth edition, revised and enlarged, of the 'Analysis of English History,' by W. C. Pearce and Dr. S. Hague, LL.B. This book is excellently adapted for those who only have time to work up the more important facts of English history, such facts being placed before them in a clearly intelligible form, with an arrangement that readily impresses the information on the memory. In the present edition the British Roman and early English periods have been entirely rewritten and considerably enlarged so as to conform with the increased importance given to them in recent examinations. The work of revision has been undertaken by Mr. W. F. Bangust.

Mr. John Murray.—'The Technical French Grammar,' by Dr. W. Krisch. As the title implies, Dr. Krisch's Grammar is primarily intended for technical schools. The author or compiler has had many years' experience of the practical work of teaching, and therefore knows what to include and what to omit. He is of opinion that 'the existing grammars, exercise-books, reading-books, &c., do not provide either a systematic method applicable to the intelligent study of any particular foreign language, nor make the best of a limited time in enabling the student to grasp the component parts and the construction of a simple sentence.' To supply the real or fancied references, Dr. Krisch has prepared the present work, which certainly seems practical. The method, we should think, will be found simple and effective. The points which are likely to puzzle a beginner are made admirably clear, and there are exercises in difficult rules likely to leave an abiding impression on the learner's mind. The chapters on the verb should be studied by every pupil, not only in our technical, but in our public schools as well. In the pressure of other departments Mr. Murray does not neglect the excellent Progressive Science Series. In one of the most recent issues, 'A Book about Whales,' Mr. F. E. Beddard gives us a work which is at once popular and scientific. Mr. Beddard treats of the external form of whales, their internal structures, position in regard to other aquatic mammals, classification, the hunting of whales, right whales, the rorquals, toothed whales or Odontoceti, beaked whales, the dolphins, anomalous dolphins, and the Zeuglodonts and their allies. The whole concludes with a carefully prepared index. The anatomy of the whales forms a subject of no slight interest. In the matter of stomach, teeth, brain, and other internal structures it presents a number of peculiarities that are difficult to account for. The stomach, for instance, is an exceedingly complicated organ, divided into several chambers, the number of which varies according to the variety of the whale, the common porpoise having four such divisions, and the Ziphioid whales as many as thirteen or fourteen. A comparison of the whale's stomach with that of the ruminant shows that they are alike in having primarily two divisions, but this is a universal character, and may be seen in other vertebrates—birds, sharks, &c. It has been suggested, however, that whales, though distinctly carnivorous animals, ruminate like oxen. Mr. Beddard decides, from various observations, that this is not the case. The true reason of the complicated character of the whale's stomach he is unable to explain. It is a problem that must remain unsolved. From even this slight reference to one of the details of the subject it will be seen of what an interesting character the book is. It is rendered still further attractive and valuable by a large number of full-page and other illustrations by W. Sidney Berridge. Although not strictly a school book, we may, in view of public events, refer again to 'Leading Points in South African History, 1486 to March 30, 1900, arranged chronologically with date-index,' by Edwin A. Pratt. Those who would make themselves acquainted with the history of South Africa prior to the present lamentable trouble, and so be in a position to consider the question from a thoroughly intelligent point of view, should certainly study this volume. The causes of the war, as the author reminds his readers, are the result of a 'situation' that began to be created long before the Franchise Question, the Jameson Raid, Majuba Day, or the aspirations of capitalists in South Africa were even thought of. 'They must be traced at least as far back as the Slachter's Nek Rebellion, when the Boers by trying to enlist the natives on their side in order to drive the British out of South Africa made their first move in the great struggle for supremacy which was bound to be fought out "to the bitter end" sooner or later.' One feature of Mr. Pratt's work is that the reader can easily refer by means of the date-heading at the top of each page to the events of any year he may seek information about. The entire volume, excellently printed in large clear type, is one of great interest, and should be of no little service in spreading an impartial comprehension of the rights and wrongs of the war. We have already chronicled the appearance of a second edition of Mr. Theophilus D. Hall's 'Greek Testament Reader for Use in Schools.' The volume, which comprises consecutive extracts from the Synoptic Gospels and Passages from the Epistles of St. Paul, should be found of excellent service by those desiring to read the New Testament in its original language, as well as by the junior students in schools and colleges. To the Handy Classical Maps issued by Mr. Murray, we have on more than one occasion referred. These contain points of excellence peculiar to themselves, and cannot fail to be of great use to students. They have also the advantage of being interesting to the man in the street. Those already issued include Gallia, Italia, Germania, Britannia, Hispania, Palestine, Syria, and part of Mesopotamia. Mr. Murray is also publishing a new edition, in two parts, of 'The Student's Gibbon,' abridged from Sir William Smith's well-known work. Part I. is out, and Part II. will be ready shortly. A new edition is likewise published of 'A History of Greece, from the Earliest Times to the Roman Conquest,' revised, and in part rewritten, by E. E. Marindin, M.A.

Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Son's list embraces a number of valuable books for educational purposes. In their 'Royal School' series they have just published a capital work on 'Domestic Science: The Science of Domestic Economy and Hygiene Treated Experimentally,' by Thomas Cartwright, B.A., B.Sc. We can quite understand the reluctance attributed by the author to the necessity of the girls being allowed by the teacher to work all the experiments with their own hands, for by this training they are more likely to remember the essentials of the subject. The volume is amply supplied with diagrams. Messrs. Nelson have also made a recent addition to the 'Royal Osborne Geography Readers.' This constitutes Book VI. (for Standards VI. and VII.) and is devoted to 'The British Empire: its Geography and Commerce.' The subjects of treatment include Canada, British Columbia, the West Indies, British Honduras and British Guiana, New South Wales, Queensland, South Australia, the South Sea Islands, India, Burma, British South Africa, Natal, the Orange River Colony, Southern Rhodesia, Egypt, British West Africa, and Nigeria. There are several maps and other illustrations, and the work is written in such a clear, pleasant style that it can scarcely fail to impress the facts upon the reader. New issues of 'Nelson's Supplementary Readers' tell the stories of 'Little Nell' and 'David Copperfield's Boyhood;' young people are likely to find much attraction in these books. 'Picture Essays: an Illustrated Composition Book for the Higher Standards,' contains pictures from the animal world, the vegetable world, the mineral world, on geographic, historical, and other subjects, and the student is expected to write out an exercise in connection with each. All Messrs. Nelson's school books are admirably prepared, with a full knowledge of the requirements of pupils.

Mr. David Nutt.—'A Simplified French Conversational Manual; or, How to Converse in French whilst Travelling, at the Hotel, Restaurant, Shopping, with the Principal Routes to Paris, and Places of Interest,' by Louise Litta. It sometimes strikes us that most of the guide-books on French conversational phraseology are wonderfully pedantic. A gentleman, for instance, who inquired where he could buy some good boots—an absolute necessity, as we all know, for foreign travel—would hardly be likely to receive the reply: 'Au magasin d'en face.' A Frenchman would simply, with an ejaculation and a wave of his hand, indicate the place. But, of course, that method of reply would be too light and airy for solid John Bull, who must wade through the form of solid speech. There are many good points in Louise Litta's work, and it will be found in numerous respects, we have no doubt, exceedingly useful, but it is impossible quite to teach conversational French by means of a manual. The volume, however, will prove an admirable companion as a friendly adviser, and it has the further advantage of being easily adaptable to the pocket. Among the other educational works issued by Mr. Nutt are many of acknowledged merit in the study of French and German. Those in the 'Wellington College Series' specially call for mention. 'The Wellington College French Grammar,' by H. W. Eve and F. de Baudiss, has now reached a thirteenth edition, and in every way merits its great success, while other works of this series that have met with much acceptance are 'A School German Grammar,' by H. W. Eve; 'The Public Examination French Handbook,' by M. Deshumbert; 'Dictionary of Difficulties met with in Speaking and Writing French,' by M. Deshumbert; and 'Elementary German Exercises,' by W. E. Mullins. Where all are of such uniform merit it seems almost invidious to select any for special praise, but we should not forget while running through Mr. Nutt's list to take notice of Jaschke's Conversation Dictionaries in English-French, English-German, English-Italian, and English-Spanish.

Messrs. Oliver & Boyd.—Included in the publications of this Edinburgh firm are several valuable works on English, French, and German Grammar. Among these may be mentioned 'The Principles of French Grammar,' with numerous exercises, by C. S. Le Harivel; and 'The Child's French Grammar,' by Clara A. Fairgrieve, of which a second edition has now been published. A good work is the 'Elementary Trigonometry' of A. J. Pressland, M.A., and Charles Tweedie, M.A. This is sold separately in two parts. Other volumes calling for notice are 'Practical Plane and Solid Geometry,' by James Kiddel; Surenne's 'Pronouncing French and English Dictionary,' which has now been reduced in price, and constitutes one of the cheapest dictionaries we know of; and Clyde's 'School Geography,' of which the twenty-sixth edition, thoroughly revised, is now published. We must also say a good word for Oliver and Boyd's 'Nature Knowledge and Object-Lesson Cards,' which will be found an invaluable aid in tutorial work.

Oxford University Press.—From this house come several new classical works, which are certain to be of assistance to the student for the College of Preceptors' Examinations in July and December 1901. A second edition has been published, in a size suitable for use in schools, of Mr. E. C. Wickham's edition of 'Horace, Vol. I.', containing the Odes, Carmen Seculare, and Epodes. Other new editions are 'Livy, Book V.,' edited by A. R. Cluer and P. E. Matheson; 'Virgil: Æneid I.,' edited by C. S. Jerram; 'Euripides—Alcestis,' edited by C. S. Jerram; and 'Xenophon: Anabasis II.,' with Notes and Map, edited by C. S. Jerram. We also notice a third edition of that admirable work, 'A Short History of the Norman Conquest of England,' by Professor E. A. Freeman, and Shakespeare's 'Henry the Fifth,' edited by the sound Shakespearean scholar, W. Aldis Wright.

Messrs. Lovell Reeve & Co.—The educational works issued by this firm are mostly on natural science, and are designed for beginners and amateurs. Written in a popular style that will arrest the reader's attention, they are yet thoroughly scientific in their method, and will lay a splendid foundation for more advanced study. Each volume is well illustrated. Among the subjects laid under contribution are Botany, Natural History, Archæology, Astronomy, and Chemistry. In their own special line the student could scarcely find more helpful companions.

Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall & Co.—In the long run the value of a work, be it educational or purely literary, is proved by the public appreciation. Judged by this standard the works of Dr. Cornwell now deserve to be described by the epithet 'standard.' They have been before the public for many years, yet the demand continues unabated. When some ninety editions of a book are published that book may certainly be said to have succeeded with the public for which it was intended. 'A School Geography' has the distinction of being one of the most popular school books ever offered to the scholastic profession. That one fact sufficiently attests its excellence. Another book of amazing vitality is 'Allen and Cornwell's School Grammar,' of which considerably over sixty editions have been sold. 'The Science of Arithmetic,' by Dr. Cornwell and Sir Joshua G. Fitch, is yet another example of excellence appreciated. But, indeed, all Dr. Cornwell's works are in such high favour with teachers and students that to single out special books almost seems invidious.

Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.—At a time when Imperialism is so much in the air, and the boys of England are eagerly reading of the deeds of heroism performed by our soldiers and sailors in different parts of the world, Mr. Fitchett's picturesque work, 'How England Saved Europe, the Story of the Great War (1793 1815),' may be said to have a distinctly educational value. In interest Mr. Fitchett's work vies with the best of recent romances, and it has the supreme advantage of being real. Those who would know something of the part played by this country in the great military events that convulsed Europe at the beginning of the century should certainly read this work. There is 'go,' there is vigour, there is a congenial appreciation of the subject, in the author's treatment that irresistibly draws the reader on. A notable feature of the work is the number of excellent portraits and maps that accompany the text, and the general production in the matter of printing, binding, and paper calls for warm praise. Juvenile and, indeed, adult readers may also be reminded afresh of the excellence of Mr. Fitchett's companion works, 'Deeds that Won the Empire,' now in its twelfth edition, and 'Fights for the Flag.' An able work of a different kind is Mrs. Field's 'Introduction to the Study of the Renaissance.' More purely, at any rate more technically, educational is 'A Simple Grammar of English now in Use,' by Professor Earl. Varying Sheridan's praise of a speech in the House of Commons, there is a great deal both of what is new and what is true in Mr. Earl's little book. 'English Prose: its Elements, History, and Usage,' by the same author, is a solid work for serious students. The merit of the 'Physiological Diagrams,' by the late John Marshall, F.R.S., F.R.C.S., Professor of Surgery, University College, is so generally recognised that we need scarcely refer to it. The same remark applies to 'A Description of the Human Body,' now in its fourth edition.

Mr. T. Fisher Unwin. — Few works of history are of more real educational value than the books included in Mr. Unwin's admirable 'Story of the Nations' series. In all instances they are written by men recognised as competent authorities in the subjects of which they treat, and for the most part are wonderful examples of the art of presenting information in a condensed yet lucid form. One of the latest and best is 'Modern Italy, 1748–1898,' by Pietro Orsi. The narrative of a nation that, in spite of tremendous obstacles, both at home and abroad, has won her way to independence and the clearer and more elevated comprehension of her rights and duties must always claim the sympathy of the student of history, and though no doubt in the case of Italy there is yet much to be done, the vigorous progress she has made in recent years towards shaking off the traditions and trammels of the past should promise well for the future. The author describes Italy after Aquisgrana, her condition during the French Revolution, the Napoleonic régime, the Restoration, revolutionary beginnings, the years of reaction from 1821 to 1830, Giuseppe Mazzini and 'Young Italy,' the war of 1848 and 1849, the beginning of Victor Emmanuel II.'s reign, the action of Piedmont, the war of 1859, the Roman question, the war of 1866, and the history of Italy since 1870. Finally, we have a very interesting chapter on literature and art. Naturally enough stress is laid on what Italy has done for music, and he cites the cases of Verdi, Ponchielli, Boito, Puccini, Mascagni, Leoncavallo, Franchetti, Giordano, and Perosi as evidence of the wealth of her composers. Altogether the work is exceedingly interesting and instructive. Another series of uncommon educational value published by Mr. Unwin is 'The Builders of Greater Britain' series, which includes works by competent writers on the expansion of our colonies. We have from time to time reviewed the various volumes of this excellent series as they appeared, and now we need only call the attention of teachers and students to them, as works possessing a permanent historical value. In view of the present interest in Ireland and things Irish, the 'Review of Irish History in Relation to the Social Development of Ireland,' by Mr. D. P. Gannon, which Mr. Unwin announces, ought to appeal to English readers.

Messrs. Frederick Warne & Co.—The object of 'The Nuttall Encyclopædia of Universal Information,' edited by the Rev. James Wood, as defined by the promoters, is 'to provide, in a concise and condensed form, and at a cheap rate, an epitome of the kind of information given in the larger encyclopædias, such as may prove sufficient for the ordinary requirements of the generality of people, and especially of such as have not the means for purchasing or the leisure for studying the larger.' It consists of some 16,000 brief articles on subjects that are likely to be inquired about in ordinary life, particular attention being devoted to the departments of history, biography, geography, literature, philosophy, religion, science, and art, The volume has been very carefully prepared. Among Messrs. Warne's publications appear many volumes that, without being exactly written to the term educational, yet merit the attention of the student. Such volumes are: 'John Ruskin: his Life and Teaching,' by J. Marshall Mather; 'The Rise of the Dutch Republic,' by John Lothrop; 'The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire,' by Edward Gibbon; 'Plutarch's Lives,' Langhorne translation. Each of these works is in a neat, serviceable form, at a popular price. Of a more distinctly educational character are the 'History of England and the British Empire: a Record of Events—Political, Constitutional, Naval, Military, and Literary—from B.C. 55 to A.D. 1890,' by Edgar Sanderson, M.A.; 'Half-hours of English History,' edited by Charles Knight; 'Lessons on Art,' by J. D. Harding, and 'Lessons on Trees,' by the same author. Old and well valued friends again appeal to us in the 'Nuttall Encyclopædia' and 'Nuttall's Standard Pronouncing Dictionary,' while a work of more modern date which has now obtained a permanent reputation is the 'Dictionary of Quotations,' compiled from ancient and modern, English and foreign sources, by the Rev. James Wood, who for so many years has had 'Nuttall' under his editorial charge. A number of new prize books are also included in Messrs. Warne's list, embracing naval, military, botanical, and literary subjects, and well adapted in each case as rewards for merit.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. George Bell & Sons.—'Twelfth Night; or, What You Will,' and 'King Richard II.' These the latest issues of the excellent 'Chiswick Shakespeare' show no falling off in the daintiness of production that has been the distinguishing characteristic of previous volumes. Paper, printing, and general 'get-up' are alike admirable, and though the illustrations of Mr. Byam Shaw appeal to us less attractively than to many of his admirers, we are at least willing to admit that they exhibit great originality of conception, and are marked by considerable artistic skill. To each volume Mr. John Dennis contributes a short interesting introduction, and some excellent notes.

From Messrs. David Bryce & Son, Glasgow.—McIan's 'Highlanders at Home, or Gaelic Gatherings,' with descriptive letterpress by James Logan. Messrs. Bryce have done well in issuing a new edition in handy form of McIan's 'Highlanders at Home.' It is a book for which the Gael at home and abroad, particularly the Gael abroad, will thank them. There are twenty-four coloured illustrations, and though all are not equally meritorious they are invariably interesting. And both letterpress and illustrations are valuable as illustrating phases of Highland life and character which have passed or are fast passing away. In no part of the United Kingdom have the changes been so marked during the last quarter of a century as in the Highlands, and this book preserves many characteristics of the past. It is therefore eminently a work for the present.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'David Polmere,' by Mrs. Lodge. This is one of those novels which, without possessing any particular distinction of plot or style, yet proves mildly and pleasantly interesting, and can be recommended to readers as an antidote to the heat of the dog-days, when the mental strain demanded by more intellectual fiction is overpowering and irksome. Perhaps, too, some portions of Mrs. Lodge's book may prove unintentionally amusing. We have often wondered ourselves why writers will go out of their way to depict sections of society with which they have apparently had little acquaintance, when the circles they know well are left almost entirely neglected. Actual experience of a certain phase of life is worth more in the novelist's hands than all the perfervid imagination in the world, for it imparts force and reality to his descriptions. But after all it is a common failing for us to overlook our own gifts. Did not Buckstone think he could play Othello, and was he by any means the first low comedian who imagined he had a fine capacity for the higher walks of tragedy? The actual weapons that lie close to our hands are ofttimes completely neglected.

From Messrs. Duckworth & Co.—'Handbook of British Rubi,' by William Moyle Rogers, F.L.S. Manifestly a large amount of painstaking labour has been devoted to this work on the British brambles, and the knowledge acquired from a lengthened study of the subject has been carefully sifted and arranged. Faults both of commission and omission it would no doubt not be difficult to find, but the volume as a whole may be warmly commended as an interesting contribution to the literature of a genus that has scarcely attracted so much attention in the botanical world as it deserves. In his description of the various forms the author has been commendably brief, though when exactness could only be obtained by rather more fulness, he has not hesitated to make use of greater space. The distribution of the several Rubus species, so far as it is known, is given in an appendix; and here the same careful differentiation is observable as we have noticed in the remainder of the work. For those botanists whose location or natural impulse has made them take a special interest in the British brambles we can recommend the Rev. William Moyle Rogers's handbook as providing a great fund of interest.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird.—'Blood Tracks of the Bush,' by Simpson Newland. It is no slight praise to say that in most respects Mr. Newland's present story will favourably compare with his previous novel 'Paving the Way,' which met, it may be remembered, with more than ordinary success. It is well conceived, vigorously written, and full of exciting incidents. Some readers may perhaps object that the general nature of the narrative is rough and sensational, showing little of the refinements of polite life, but this is a characteristic that appertains to all Australian fiction, and there are many worse things in our fictional literature than healthy melodrama. Certainly of absorbing incident there is enough and to spare in Mr. Newland's story. The experiences of Arnold Wroithsley, who goes out to Australia with the object of raising enough money to redeem the family estates, are fraught with the deepest interest, and the various phases of his character, good and bad, are displayed to excellent effect. Villainy is more prominent than virtue in the plot, but it has the advantage of thoroughly arresting the reader's attention.

From Mr. John Long.—'The Shadow of Allah: being the Adventures of Sarif Ak Karasy, the Circassian, in Stamboul,' by Morley Roberts and Max Montesole. The local colouring of this story—which is uncommonly strong—is supplied, we presume, by the second of the two authors, he who figures on the binding in the smaller type. The book, we think, suffers from want of a clearly defined plot, and the reader though occasionally roused to a state of excitement by the account of desperate adventure, the entrance of the Sultan's harem, and such like, becomes mystified and at last weary by the amount of small detail to which he is treated. But if he can accustom himself to this, other features of the narrative will very agreeably engage his attention. The story, as we have said, is not wanting in stirring incident, and in some respects it may even be termed dramatic. The fault lies in the quantity of useless material, which might with advantage have been flung overboard.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'China and the Present Crisis, with Notes on a Visit to Japan and Korea,' by Joseph Walton, M.P. The author of this volume recently spent several months in a tour through the Celestial Empire with the object of ascertaining at first hand what were the opinions of the best-informed inhabitants in regard to Eastern questions, and it is plain that his energies were never allowed to lie dormant during this period. The record, too, has every evidence of strict impartiality, for here and there little passages creep in which under the strict supervision of an experienced literary editor would no doubt have been struck out, and there is an air of unstudied candour about the entire narrative. Thus when he interviews Prince Ching and Li-Hung Ghang, and exchanges his political views—which bear very strongly on the weakness, not to say incapacity, shown by the British Government in its treatment of Chinese questions—with each of these potentates, he is pleased to find that they heartily approve of his suggestions, but he is careful to add, a little slyly, that it is usual for Chinamen to be polite enough to profess to agree with whatever those who interview them say. 'It was, therefore, impossible to know if these distinguished men really agreed with what I urged upon them or not.' Much of the interest of the volume depends upon the meetings with notable personages, and the opinions these express, but the descriptions of the many cities visited are likewise interesting. Chefoo, Tientsin, Pekin, Wei-hai-Wei, Port Arthur, Kaio-Chau, Nankin, Shanghai, Hong Kong, Canton, &c., are all taken in order, and in each of them Mr. Walton finds evidence of the weakness of British diplomacy, and the necessity for a strong, resolute policy. Here and there lighter passages are interposed, which lend variety to the descriptions and add to the impression of unformality that the volume produces. Thus his host at Newchwang, the engineer to the Russian railway in the neighbourhood, would insist upon pouring a bottle of scent over his head, besides adding two kinds of scent to the water in which he was washing, and making him a present of a third bottle. 'I never met a man in all my life,' says Mr. Walton plaintively, with the remembrance of the shower bath evidently still smarting in his eyes, 'who seemed so fond of scent.' Again, in another place he draws attention to the subject of duck rearing, and speaks of the novel picture presented by an immense body of these succulent birds being driven about by a Chinaman, and at his word of command filing off with military precision from one feeding ground to another. It will thus be seen that Mr. Walton's volume, both in its graver and lighter moments, presents unusual attractions, and for our own part we can say that we have found much pleasure in its perusal. Included in the work is an excellent map of China.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'The Sin of Atlantis,' by Roy Horniman. Mr. Horniman's novel is steeped in occultism, and those who are believers in the influences of an unseen spirit world will find it very interesting reading. There are four principal characters, three men and a woman, and the fates have ordained, as foretold by a departed mystic, that during their worldly existence they should act and react on one another in a marked fashion. The manner in which the prediction is conveyed is solemn enough to merit reproduction. 'To my adopted son,' runs the strange document, 'the fates of the four individuals, the second of whom I have told you is yourself, are rapidly converging. The fourth, a woman, and the most necessary, can naturally only be placed in communication with the first and yourself by means of the third. In the third ego remains, perfect in form and unknown to the owner, the figure which means such power as no human being has ever held. You must subdue the tendency of this ego to withdraw itself entirely from our circle, that of complete individualism. The moral fall between the third and fourth places the secret in your hands, provided you first, of course, control the will of the third. The first is your opponent, who would sacrifice the treasure on the altar of a vain spiritual imagining.' It will be noticed that the language of this awful prophecy is thoroughly in keeping with our recognised knowledge of the ancient seers, being appropriately involved and unintelligible; but it can hardly be said that the events thus predicted come up to the height of our anticipations. However, we are introduced to a very charming girl in the person of the mysterious 'Fourth,' and the account of her love attachment for the Duke of Havant—otherwise the powerful and incomparable 'Third'—forms the most delightful portion of the volume. Possibly the author may think the excursions into the spirit world are the greatest attraction, but we for our part are scarcely of this opinion.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'Cycling in the Alps, with some Notes on the Chief Passes,' by C. L. Freeston. The bicycle is about the last thing an Englishman would think of taking with him to Switzerland, but a careful perusal of Mr. Freeston's book almost leaves one with the conviction that a bicycle is indispensable to the tourist in that part of the world. 'Go to the "show" places by all means,' he says, but take them at the earliest opportunity, 'for the very important reason that, once higher ground has been reached, the tourist's interest in the towns simply melts into thin air. No one who has cycled over any of the passes would think of "mooning" around Lucerne, or sulking in rain-sodden Interlaken. The difference between the atmosphere of the big towns or lowland valleys and that of the passes is too vital to make the former more than barely endurable after tasting the superior delights of loftier ground.' The Engadine, which Mr. Freeston thinks should be the objective of every tourist who takes his machine to Switzerland, is described as 'a cyclist's Paradise.' Here it is possible to indulge in sixty miles of cycling without a yard of walking, and through some of the finest scenery in the world. The joys of coasting, too, await the cyclist on a scale impossible and even undreamt of in the United Kingdom, and the climbs, apparently, are not so arduous as one would imagine; the higher regions of Switzerland, as well as the adjoining Tyrol, being permeated by a system of skilfully contrived carriage roads. Cyclists in search of a new touring ground for the holidays should get this book; certainly they ought not to start on a cycling tour in the Alps without consulting it; for it gives much sound advice on the subject of brakes and other important matters. The book is ably written, and the twenty-four full-page drawings by A. R. Quinton are excellent.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Day-by-Day Cookery Book: Breakfast, Lunch, and Dinner Menus for Every Day of the Year,' by A. N. Whybrow. The human being, male or female, who imagines from slight experience that it is an easy thing to concoct a bill of culinary fare for every day in the year should try their hand at it. We guarantee that after the first month or even fortnight they will be thoroughly in difficulties over their task. Of course if money is of no object—if there be no necessity for using up the fragments that nothing remain—the work will be considerably simplified, but even then great ingenuity in the matter of arrangement has to be displayed. The author of this volume has grappled with her difficulties fairly satisfactorily, though she has had to evade the question of economy—that obstruction in the way of all good cookery books—somewhat. We should like to have seen the average cost of each of her dishes included in the work. She also apparently presupposes a certain amount of previous knowledge of cookery in her readers, for directions as to the preparation of some of the simpler sauces, gravies, &c., are not given. It is upon these minor accessories to a dinner that much of the success of a meal often depends, and we have known the cook who, excellent in the higher departments of her calling, could scarcely make presentable melted butter sauce. Generally speaking, we fancy, Miss Whybrow's work will be more suggestive than instructive, and the housewife will find it exceedingly helpful in the selection of the daily meals. And surely this is no slight praise, for of the difficulty of catering day by day to suit the varied requirements of a family's taste only those who have been engaged in the task can adequately speak.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'A Millionaire of Yesterday,' by E. Phillips Oppenheim. Though we can hardly say we like 'A Millionaire of Yesterday' so much as some of Mr. Oppenheim's previous novels, there is no doubt it is a stirring piece of work, which culminates in a powerful situation. The picture of the hard masterful hero who at great risk of his life has obtained the concession of some valuable gold-laden land from a native king on the West Coast of Africa, and on returning to this country speedily converts his venture into a company, with the immediate result that he becomes a millionaire, is vigorously drawn and can scarcely fail to hold the reader's attention by its intensity. Subsequently, the path of Scarlet Trent's progress is beset with obstacles. There is a suspicion that the concession of the territory is not entirely his own—that he had a companion in his African exploration, an older man, whom he treacherously left to die in the bush. A rascally Jew, whom for sake of ready cash Trent had admitted to a sixth share of the undertaking, is his chief accuser, and holds the accusation over his head as a means of extorting blackmail. To make matters more complicated and therefore more interesting, Trent falls desperately in love with the daughter of his late partner, who, understanding that this man has been the means of her father's death, determines to revenge herself upon him. But as it so happens the father is not dead at all, having been rescued after he and Trent parted company. He is, however, a hopeless dipsomaniac. Here, then, is a nice tangle of circumstances which Mr. Oppenheim may be trusted to unravel to the utmost advantage, and indeed through the intricacies of his plot he leads his reader with a firm grasp. The story may be a little unnatural in places, but it is never dull, and we can safely recommend it as a means of dispelling any number of gloomy thoughts. The illustrations are by Stanley L. Wood, and are thoroughly in keeping with the nature of the narrative.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'Vanity's Price,' by E. Yolland. The author's imagination, which seems to be of a very untutored character, has been allowed to run wild in this novel, and all probability has been cast to the winds. The heroine is a remarkable young woman who has inherited from an equally strange ancestor the taint of a thoroughly heartless disposition. Her great fear in life is that she should become old: for age, in whatever form it presents itself, is most abhorent to her; even the old servants she refrains from looking at so that she may be spared the pain of contemplating their bewrinkled faces, and on being playfully called 'a dear old thing' by her light-hearted sister she raves frantically. This delightful being has been left a considerable sum of money, to the enjoyment of which she characteristically devotes herself without any consideration for the wants of others; and having heard of a celebrated continental doctor, who, by a peculiar system of treatment, can ensure for his patients a perennial appearance of youthfulness, she hastens to place herself under his care. The good doctor's efforts are attended by success, and so after the lapse of some years we find Clarice Ainsley disporting herself among the élite of Italian aristocracy at Rome, still apparently a beautiful young woman, but with a canker-worm at her heart, sapping her innermost soul. It seems that a wily Italian has penetrated her secret, and, under the threat of revealing her actual condition to the fashionable world, has compelled her to join a secret society, of which she is now the helpless tool. Eventually she is directed to commit a political murder, and only escapes from the dread penalty through the heroic efforts of a girl friend, who apparently warmly espouses her cause at only a few hours' notice. And so the story runs on. It is almost disappointing at its conclusion to find that the bad dispositioned heroine emerges from her thrilling experiences a nicely whitewashed and regenerated character, with every prospect of happiness; but possibly the authoress thought that as her story was mainly designed for the less acute and cultivated of fiction readers, this further concession to their tastes was advisable.

From Messrs. John Wright & Co., Bristol.—'Operative and Practical Surgery: for the Use of Students and Practitioners,' by Thomas Carwardine, M.S. (Lond.), F.R.C.S. This is an excellent work, explaining in clear, simple language, free from anything like pedantry, the treatment of fractures, operations for amputation (at various points) of the arm and leg, excision of the shoulder joint, elbow joint, knee joint and wrist, trephining of the skull, &c. In various sections all the different surgical diseases affecting the head, neck and chest, limbs, abdominal cavity, teeth, nose, larynx, ear and eye, are dealt with, and their treatment fully discussed. Some exceedingly useful directions are given on the subject of bandaging, dislocations, splints and fractures, and a large number of original diagrams enable the student to follow very closely the author's descriptions. Such rudimentary but highly essential topics as the method of examination of patients, the chief points to take note of before an actual manual investigation is entered upon, are not forgotten, and though the general practitioner may be inclined to scoff at the simplicity of some of the suggestions offered, it is in these smaller matters, we fancy, that he often makes a mistake. The writer of this notice well remembers the case of a medical man who was quite unable to perform the simple operation of venesection through non-attention to a rule taught him at his college. He had paid attention to the higher grades of his medical training, somewhat disdaining the more commonplace forms of treatment, with the result that when he entered into practice he was often at a loss how to treat quite an ordinary type of complaint. Mr. Carwardine's book, we may be sure, will not be any the less useful because he has devoted some attention to the simpler aspects of his subject. The practical character of his work is, in fact, one of its chief merits. A few of the sections in the volume, we should mention, have been supplied by other writers. Thus Mr. W. R. Ackland has written the chapter on the extraction of teeth; Dr. P. Watson Williams that on the examination of the nose and the larynx; Mr. W. H. Harsant contributes an interesting section on diseases of the ear and their complications; and Mr. F. R. Cross writes of the examination and treatment of the eye.

New Editions.—From Messrs. Macmillan & Co. comes an excellent reprint, with Hugh Thomson's illustrations and an introduction by Austin Dobson, of Jane Austen's 'Sense and Sensibility.' In this popular form the story should enjoy a wide circulation. From the same firm we have also received reprints of Captain Marryat's 'Snarley-Yow,' illustrated by H. R. Millar, with an introduction by David Hannay, and 'Glaucus,' by Charles Kingsley, with coloured illustrations. The production of each volume, by reason of its excellent printing, paper, and neat binding, calls for warm praise.—We have also received from the same firm neatly bound, clearly printed, and well illustrated copies of 'The Pirate and the Three Cutters,' by Captain Marryat; 'Robinson Crusoe,' by Daniel Defoe; and 'Pride and Prejudice,' by Jane Austen. The first is supplied with illustrations by Edmund J. Sullivan and an introduction by David Hannay; and the last can boast of the artistic assistance, always cleverly displayed, of Charles E. Brock, and an interesting 'foreword' by Austin Dobson. Our old never to be forgotten friend, 'Robinson Crusoe,' is reprinted with the biographical introduction of the late Henry Kingsley, but the illustrations by J. Macfarlane we do not remember to have seen before.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

⁂ In addition to the names of book sizes, such as cr. 8vo. royal 8vo., &c., the sizes are also given where possible in inches: inch = $2\frac{1}{2}$ centimètres.

APPROVED SCHOOL BOOKS BY DR. CORNWELL, F.R.G.S.

'We are qualified by ample trial of the books in our own classes to speak to their great efficiency and value. We have never known so much interest evinced or so much progress made as since we have employed these as our school books.'—EDUCATIONAL TIMES.

A SCHOOL GEOGRAPHY. 88th Edition, 3*s.* 6*d.*; or with Thirty Maps, 5*s.* 6*d.*

'Very superior to the common run of such books. It contains a good deal of useful matter of a more practical kind than usual, which the exercises are likely to impress on the mind more deeply than by the parrot system.'—ATHENÆUM.

A SCHOOL ATLAS. Consisting of Thirty Small Maps. A companion Atlas to the Author's 'School Geography.' 2*s.* 6*d.*, or 4*s.* coloured.

GEOGRAPHY FOR BEGINNERS. 68th Edition, 1*s.*; or, with 48 pp. of Questions, 1*s.* 4*d.* Questions, 6*d.*

'A very useful Series of Educational Works, of which Dr. Cornwell is either author or editor. It ("The Geography for Beginners") is an admirable introduction. There is a vast difficulty in writing a good elementary book, and Dr. Cornwell has shown himself possessed of that rare combination of faculties which is required for the task.'—JOHN BULL.

POETRY FOR BEGINNERS: a Selection of Short and Easy Poems for Reading and Recitation. 13th Edition, 1*s.*

ALLEN AND CORNWELL'S SCHOOL GRAMMAR. 64th Edition, 2*s.* red leather; or 1*s.* 9*d.* cloth.

'The excellence of the Grammar published by the late Dr. Allen and Dr. Cornwell makes us almost despair of witnessing any decided improvement in this department.'—ATHENÆUM.

GRAMMAR FOR BEGINNERS: an Introduction to Allen and Cornwell's 'School Grammar.' 87th Edition, 1*s.* cloth; 9*d.* sewed.

'This simple Introduction is as good a book as can be used.' SPECTATOR.

THE YOUNG COMPOSER: Progressive Exercises in English Composition. 48th Edition, 1*s.* 6*d.* KEY, 3*s.*

'The plan of the work is very superior. We are persuaded this little work will be found valuable to the intelligent instructor.'—WESTMINSTER REVIEW.

SPELLING FOR BEGINNERS: a Method of Teaching Reading and Spelling at the same time. 4th Edition, 1*s.*

THE SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC: Systematic Course of Numerical Reasoning and Computations. With very numerous Exercises. By JAMES CORNWELL, Ph.D., and Sir JOSHUA G. FITCH, LL.D. 26th Edition. 4*s.* 6*d.*

'The best work on arithmetic which has yet appeared. It is both scientific and practical in the best and fullest sense.' LONDON QUARTERLY.

KEY to SCIENCE OF ARITHMETIC. With the Method of Solution to every Question. 4*s.* 6*d.*

SCHOOL ARITHMETIC. 18th Edition. 1*s.* 6*d.* KEY, 4*s.* 6*d.*

'Eminently practical, well stored with examples of wider range and more varied character than are usually given in such books, and, its method of treatment being thoroughly inductive, it is pre-eminently the book for general use.' ENGLISH JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

ARITHMETIC FOR BEGINNERS. Combines simplicity and fulness in teaching the First Four Rules and Elementary Fractions. 9th Edition. 1*s.*

London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & CO., LIMITED. Edinburgh: OLIVER & BOYD.

HEALTH AND CONDITION IN THE ACTIVE AND THE SEDENTARY.

By NATHANIEL EDWARD YORKE-DAVIES,

Licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians of London, M.R.C.S.; Author of 'Foods for the Fat,' 'The Dietetics of Obesity,' 'Aids to Long Life,' &c.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS ON THE WORK.

'Those who desire a long and healthy life will perhaps find their best means of attaining it in the study and observance of such rules as are laid down here. . . . The book is a rational and practical guide to "Health and Condition."'—MORNING POST.

'Full of valuable hints and suggestive warnings as to the results of improper food and insufficient exercise.'—DAILY TELEGRAPH.

'Books like this ought to be very useful.'—GLOBE.

'We hope our readers will note our remarks and consult the valuable book that suggests them.'—QUEEN.

'The author brings a very wide, if not the widest, of all experiences to bear upon his subject, and he treats it most lucidly.'—SPORTSMAN.

'"Of the making of books there is no end," but if the books are of the instructive nature of this work we can never have too many of them.'—PUBLIC OPINION.

'This brief book is written with arch-vivacity, and is not only readable but racy.'—SPEAKER.

'Distinctly diverting is this modest narrative, and it may be recommended heartily to lovers of light reading.'—GLOBE.

THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF HANDWRITING

Manual for Inspectors, School Boards, Teachers, and Students

WITH UPWARDS OF EIGHTY DIAGRAMS AND ILLUSTRATIONS.

By JOHN JACKSON, F.E.I.S., Founder of the System of Upright Penmanship.

Demy 8vo. cloth, price 5s.

'Our only text-book on Handwriting.'—JOURNAL OF EDUCATION.

'The most complete practical handbook on Handwriting which has yet appeared.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

'Should not only be found in the library of every teacher, but on his desk for constant reference.'—SCHOOLMASTER.

'No teacher who desires to be in complete touch with the foremost educational thinkers of the day can afford to pass it by unread.'—EDUCATIONAL REVIEW, N.Y.

'Your book on writing is used as the text-book on the subject by all my P.T.'s and Assistants. A copy of it has on my desk and is in constant use in one part of the school or another when the work is writing.'—B. CLARK, Esq., Head Master Seaham Harbour National School (one of the most successful teachers of writing in Great Britain).

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Limited, St. Dunstan's House, London, E.C.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE, July 27, 1899.

THE FOURTH EDITION OF

JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND NEW QUESTIONS (with Answers).

Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 460 pp. price 4s.

In issuing a Fourth Edition of this valuable work, the Publishers would direct the attention of teachers not only to the many unique features which render it so superior as a text-book for Middle and Upper Forms, Candidates for Examinations, and Students in Training, but to the addition and inclusion of over One Thousand new questions from Oxford and Cambridge Papers and other sources, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES, and to the fact that the work 'contains a great deal that they may search all existing text-books for in vain.'

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.'—ISABELLA MULVANY, B.A., Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity. No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.'—DAVID ROSS, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D., Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.

H.M. INSPECTORS AND TEACHERS:

'I will recommend it as superior to any text-book at present in use.'
'It has no rival.'
'I have learned much from it that I never saw before.'
'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'
'We have had no failure in public examinations since using your book.'

'We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.'
'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—MORNING POST. EDUCATIONAL TIMES.
'It is one of the clearest, completest, and most concise books of arithmetic produced within recent years.'—NORTHERN WHIG.
'This is one of the very best arithmetic books we have seen.'—ABERDEEN JOURNAL.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

CHINA AND THE PRESENT CRISIS

WITH NOTES ON A VISIT TO JAPAN AND KOREA.

By JOSEPH WALTON, M.P.

Second Edition in the Press.

With Map of China. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 6*s*.

'The student of the Far Eastern question cannot fail to glean many useful and instructive hints, especially from the conversations the author had with Oriental statesmen and European diplomatists.'—TIMES.

'A valuable account of China and the Chinese which all who wish to make up their minds about a very puzzling situation would do well to study for themselves. The map is extremely clear and good. Mr. Walton could scarcely have chosen a more appropriate season for issuing the account of his recent travels in the Far East.'—STANDARD.

EUROPEAN SETTLEMENTS IN THE FAR EAST:

China, Japan, Corea, Indo-China, Straits Settlements, Malay States, Siam, Netherlands, India, Borneo, the Philippines, &c. With Map and 32 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth extra, 7*s*. 6*d*.

The TIMES says :—'A very useful handbook. . . . It is a carefully compiled collection of all the best and most recent information with regard to the "Treaty Ports" of China and Japan and the chief centres of trade and commerce in the British, Russian, French, Dutch, American, and other colonies and dependencies in the Far East. Each section is prefaced with a short introduction giving an outline of the historical development, political institutions, and administrative system of the country or colony with which it deals. This is followed by a full description of every settlement, often accompanied by an illustration, with the latest statistics as to population, local industries, import and export trade, and shipping. It is an excellent work of reference, and its publication at the present moment is specially opportune.'

THE COLOMBIAN and VENEZUELAN REPUBLICS.

The Publishers' Circular

ST. DUNSTAN'S HOUSE, E.C.

August 24, 1900.

It is always interesting and occasionally instructive to learn what people read in the larger provincial towns. Londoners are perhaps inclined to over-estimate their own influence and importance in the book world. London, of course, leads in the 'consumption' as well as in the production of literature, as it leads in most other things. But if population be made the basis of calculation we fear that in respect to the number of books bought the Metropolis would make but a sorry figure beside Edinburgh, Manchester, Glasgow, Aberdeen, and Liverpool. Among the secondary towns which pay more than a casual attention to current literature Hull occupies an honourable place, and its literary tastes have to a great extent been developed by one admirable institution, the Subscription Library. That library, though now in the one hundred and twenty-fifth year of its age, exhibits all the vigour of youth. Its beginnings, as we learn from an interesting article in the Eastern Morning News, like the beginnings of great men and great institutions in general, were almost bashfully modest. The first meeting of the library was held in 1725, and a single room, rented from William Browne, a bookseller, sufficed to accommodate the books. The rent was £10 per annum. Sixteen years later a second room was added, and exactly a century ago the foundation stone of a library building was laid by the president of the day, Dr. Alderson, who remarked optimistically that 'commerce and literature are not incompatible, and when united are capable of affording the greatest sum of human happiness.'

Note that the worthy doctor did not say commerce and literature actually do yield the greatest sum of human happiness, but that they are capable of yielding it. There is nothing like caution in the president of a library. The building was several times enlarged, and finally the library joined the Literary and Philosophical Society, the result being the Royal Institution of to-day. The library section contains 55,000 books. The collection comprises some rare first editions, and is notably rich in county histories. It also contains several valuable works in natural history, including those of Gould and Bewick. But, like similar institutions it depends chiefly for prosperity on current literature, and in current literature on fiction. In general it is noticeable that the novels which are popular in London are popular in Hull also. The contributor to the Eastern Morning News gives a list of the favourite novelists, and their names are familiar in the circulating libraries of the Metropolis. Incidentally, some interesting information bearing on the comparative popularity of certain authors is given. Thus we are told that Sir Walter Besant 'is by no means popular: one copy of his latest novel supplied all requirements.' Mr. S. R. Crockett, his admirers will be sorry to learn, 'is on the wane,' and Mr. Robert Buchanan's work appears to be losing interest for the people of Hull. 'Rider Haggard,' we are informed, 'has few readers, and the same may be said of Stanley Weyman's latest book, "Sophia," and Benson's "Princess Sophia" has fewer still.' The vogue of Mr. Rudyard Kipling is declining, but Sir Walter Scott, Dickens, and Thackeray 'are appreciated by not a few readers.' This is as it should be. Several contemporary novelists whose names we need not mention are also much read in Hull, and in general it may be said that the Royal Institution treats fiction with respect.

The contributor to the Eastern Morning News is pardonably proud of the Hull Subscription Library. In the past, he says, 'it has been an important means in supplying the best possible reading coming from the English press, and in some instances from foreign publishers, and has been successful in building up a magnificent collection of books, of which we have every reason to be proud. It shows signs of increased strength, and is destined to play a still more important part in the culture of the city and the country around.' It may be added that Mr. William Andrews, himself a well-known author, is librarian, and that although he has been but a short time in office his energy and knowledge are already beginning to benefit the institution of which he has charge.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Miss Braddon has now arranged for the publication of her new novel, 'The Infidel,' during the third week of September. The English edition is, as usual, in the hands of Messrs. Simpkin & Co., while the American issue will bear the imprint of Messrs. Harper & Brothers.

A new story, entitled 'Philip Winwood,' by Mr. R. N. Stephens, the author of 'A Gentleman Player,' will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus about the middle of next month. They have also in hand new novels by Mr. William Westall and Mr. G. M. Fenn.

Mr. Ernest Rhys's new story, 'The Whistling Maid,' the publication of which has been somewhat delayed, will be issued by Messrs. Hutchinson & Co. next week. It is pure romance, and deals with the adventures of the Maid of Rhôs in her effort to bring aid to a beleaguered house.

Dr. M. J. Farrelly's work on South Africa, which Messrs. Macmillan & Co. are to publish next month, should materially add to our knowledge of the Boer question. Dr. Farrelly held for some time an official post in connection with the Transvaal Government, and may be said to possess exceptional means of arriving at a right understanding of the South African problem.

Messrs. Methuen are issuing immediately 'With the Boer Forces,' by Mr. Howard C. Hillegas. The author, in his position as a correspondent with the Boer army, was present at many of the most exciting and dramatic episodes of the war, and his work should have all the brightness and vigour which come of personal connection with the scenes described.

Mr. William Heinemann is bringing out an English edition, entitled 'A Political History of Contemporary Europe, 1814–1896,' of Professor Seignobos's 'Histoire Politique de l'Europe Contemporaine,' a work which has met with much success on the Continent, and well merits an English translation. The book is divided into two parts; in the first the author has arranged the countries in the order of their development in public life, while the second deals with the political phenomena common to various European communities.

We wonder how many books have been written round our old friend 'The Man in the Iron Mask.' Yet another is about to appear from the pen of Mr. Tighe Hopkins, who is able to embody the result of recent researches in France. We are now, it is said, on the right clue to the mystery. Mr. Hopkins divides his work into two parts. In the first he discusses the various old-fashioned theories from Voltaire downwards under the general title of 'The Man in the Moon;' while in the second, 'The Man in the Mask,' he relates what seems the true story. The publishers are Messrs. Hurst & Blackett. The volume is to be illustrated.

Sir Walter Armstrong's volume on Sir Joshua Reynolds, which Mr. Heinemann will shortly publish, pays greater attention to the characteristics of the man himself than to the events with which his life was more or less accidentally concerned. A careful estimate of Sir Joshua's position and influence in the art world is given, and the book is profusely illustrated with reproductions of the artist's work. It will form a companion volume to the same author's 'Gainsborough.'

Professor Dowden's work on 'Puritanism and English Literature,' which Messrs. Kegan Paul have in hand for the early autumn, will consist of a series of essays on the more prominent Puritans who have been distinguished in literature. Bunyan and Henry Vaughan, we understand, will receive special attention.

In its issue of last week the Academy reasserts that the ordinary profit of a bookseller on a six-shilling novel 'is four pence.' We have the figures before us worked to a fraction, and, while they cannot be given here, we repeat that the ordinary profit on a six-shilling novel is not four pence, as the Academy may learn from any bookseller's apprentice. The figures it quotes are inaccurate. In our remarks on the six-shilling novel the substitution of 'publisher' for 'bookseller' was wholly inadvertent, and it need scarcely be said we regret the mistake.

Mr. George F. Underhill has completed a work entitled 'A Century of Fox-Hunting,' which will be published in the autumn by Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co. The book in its character is both 'grave and gay,' and the heaviness of the statistical information is happily relieved by numerous trustworthy anecdotes. Mr. Underhill, we understand, pays special attention to the vexed question of sport in its relation to agriculture.

Mr. Henry James's new novel, 'The Soft Side,' will be published by Messrs. Methuen & Co. immediately. Like most of his works it is a keen analysis of character, but in the present instance the more tender human attributes have been chiefly considered. Hence the title of the book. Messrs. Methuen have also ready, for immediate publication, 'Path and Goal,' from the pen of that excellent Australian novelist, Miss Ada Cambridge. It deals with life in the Antipodes, a subject upon which the authoress can always be trusted to write herself interestingly.

It will be welcome news to many that Mr. Edward Marston—better known no doubt to the majority of readers under his nom de plume of the 'Amateur Angler'—is about to issue another volume. 'An Old Man's Holidays,' as the book is entitled, will consist of a series of papers embodying the writer's angling experiences in Yorkshire, Hampshire, and Cornwall. Fishing, however, never entirely occupied Mr. Marston's attention when holiday making, and accordingly the reader will find many pleasant descriptions of country life and scenery, such as lovers of the gentle art delight to dwell upon. The book will be illustrated, and there will be a special edition on Van Gelder hand-made paper. The publishers, of course, are Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Company.

Publishers just now are vying with each other in the strength of their announcements of autumn fiction. We have already given the lists of Mr. John Murray and Messrs. Methuen & Co. Messrs. Hutchinson now announce that they have made arrangements to publish new novels by Mr. Richard Whiteing, Madame Sarah Grand, Mr. J. A. Steuart, Mr. Frankfort Moore, Mr. Joseph Hatton, Mr. Cutcliffe Hyne, Miss Arabella Kenealy, Mr. B. L. Farjeon, Mrs. Hugh Fraser, Mr. J. S. Fletcher, Mr. Tom Gallon, the late Mrs. Lynn Linton, Mr. William Le Queux, Mr. Carlton Dawe, Miss Adeline Sergeant, and Mr. Richard Pryce.

Mr. Heinemann's list embraces the following: 'The Lane that had no Turning,' by Gilbert Parker; 'The Mantle of Elijah,' by I. Zangwill; 'Jack Raymond,' by Mrs. Voynich; 'The Image Breakers,' by Gertrude Dix; 'The Lady of Dreams,' by Una L. Silberrad; 'The Provençale,' by T. A. Cook; and 'The Hidden Model,' by F. Forbes Robertson. He will also publish new fiction by Hall Caine, Miss Robins, Kassandra Vivaria, Sarah Grand, and others.

The majority of literary men, we fancy, will heartily sympathise with the protest of Mr. Andrew Lang in the Daily News against the practice that has recently arisen of consulting well-known authors on some trivial question of custom or taste, and then working their answers into a magazine article, the 'copy' for which is thus easily obtained. But, after all, does not Mr. Lang take the matter a little too seriously, and is there any necessity for the state of indignation into which he has worked himself? At least the remedy may be said to rest with the authors themselves, and if they as a body refuse to be 'drawn' for the benefit of the magazine contributor we may be sure that the infliction will soon come to an end. But sweet are the uses of advertisement in these days, and the public curiosity in regard to the private lives and habits of their favourites is unlimited.

Mr. Lang is very amusing in his description of the [illegible] pursued, and the keenness of his satire shows how deeply he feels the persecution. Inquiries, he says, are somewhat after this fashion: 'Will you kindly send me an account of your mother, with anecdotes and photographs, to enable me to make an article for The Driveller.' Then 'people are asked to name their favourite novel, or favourite motto, or flower, or hymn, or anything else that is futile'; the recipients print the replies, and this with a little patching together constitutes the article. Mr. Lang goes on to mention some of the well-known authors who have responded to the magazine writers' application for information (having a special case evidently in his mind), and here he is scarcely on such safe ground, and his remarks are not particularly kindly or well chosen. Mr. Le Gallienne's photograph is referred to as 'studiously pretty,' and he is accused of misquoting Stevenson in a distressing way; while Mr. Guy Boothby is playfully spoken of 'as musing over a solemn fragment of Kipling.' There may possibly be reprisals after this, 'with alarums and excursions.'

The Oxford University Press, which is exhibiting in three different groups at the Paris Exhibition, has gained the unique distinction of being awarded three Grands Prix, one each for Higher Education, Bookbinding, and Oxford India Paper.

Mr. Eneas Mackay, of Stirling, will publish at an early date a volume of addresses delivered by 'Old Boys' at the annual social gatherings held in connection with the Stirling High School. The book, which is edited by Mr. James Lascelles Graham, will be illustrated by portraits of the speakers and views of the town and school, most of which have been specially prepared for the work. Among the 'Old Boys' are the Rev. John Watson, D.D. ('Ian Maclaren'), the late Professor Henry Drummond, George Alexander, Sir John Murray, and others. Mr. A. F. Hutchison, Rector emeritus of the school, will provide an introduction.

Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have issued a particularly neat edition in the original German of Heine's 'Buch der Lieder.' Like the majority of their publications, it is distinguished by a tasteful binding, good printing and paper. Admirers of the German poet should be grateful for this worthy edition of their favourite.

The life of William Cotton Oswell, one of the pioneers of our empire in South Africa, of whom Judge Hughes (with whom he was at Rugby under Arnold) once said 'without his help Livingstone could never have crossed the Kalahari Desert,' has been written by his son, W. E. Oswell, and will shortly be published by Mr. Heinemann. Oswell, it may be remembered, received the gold medal from the French Geographical Institution for his discovery of Lake Ngami. At the present moment, when we are actively building up a great commonwealth, this record of an adventurous and patriotic career should meet with much attention. The volume will be illustrated with many original drawings and photographs.

Mr. Herman C. Merivale is writing his reminiscences, and the book will be published under the title of 'Bar, Stage, and Platform,' by Messrs. Chatto & Windus. Mr. Merivale's career has been particularly varied, and his recollections should be interesting if only on account of the famous people with whom he has foregathered.

Mr. Walter Scott is to publish a sixpenny collection of detective stories, under the title 'Webs of Mystery,' by Mr. John G. Rowe. Apparently the services of the criminal investigator are not valued so highly as they once were, or is it that the author wishes to appeal to a much larger constituency?

Dr. Weir Mitchell's new story, 'The Autobiography of a Quack,' will be issued by Mr. T. Fisher Unwin almost immediately. He will also publish next week 'Famous British Regiments,' by Major Arthur Griffiths, and 'Allen Lorne,' by Alexander Macdougall, announcements of which have already appeared in these columns.

Mr. Elliot Stock is about to publish a volume of essays on social and ethical subjects by Mr. J. H. Dingle. It is entitled 'Life's Golden Counsels.'

Mr. Alexis Krausse's new book on 'The Far East; its History and its Questions,' will be published by Mr. Grant Richards early in October.

Mr. Frank Stockton will publish this autumn a volume of short stories under the title of 'Afield and Afloat.' Many of them are rescued from his contributions to periodical literature during the past three years, and inasmuch as Mr. Stockton could never be anything but Mr. Stockton, we may be assured of a plentiful supply of that dry humour which has brought him his chief fame. Another well-known American author, Mr. Joel Chandler Harris ('Uncle Remus'), also promises a volume of short stories.

The elaborate 'Universal History' edited by Professor Helmolt, which is now in course of publication by the Bibliographisches Institut at Leipzig, is to be issued in English in eight volumes by Mr. Heinemann in London, and by Messrs. Dodd, Mead & Co. in America. The English edition will have an editorial introduction on the general idea of universal history, by the Right Hon. Professor James Bryce, M.P. It will be illustrated by coloured and black and white plates, and also by numerous maps. The first volume will appear towards the end of this year, and the succeeding seven at quarterly intervals.

Among the autumn announcements of Mr. T. Fisher Unwin are 'The Unpublished and Uncollected Poems of William Cowper,' edited by Thomas Wright; and 'The Jew in London: a Study of Racial Character and Present-Day Conditions,' by C. Russell and H. S. Lewis, with an introduction by Canon Barnett, and a preface by the Right Hon. James Bryce, M.P. The last volume will contain an important map specially designed for the work.

Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. have issued a particularly neat illustrated edition, in a case, of six 'Famous Novels of the Sea.' These embrace 'The Wreck of the Grosvenor,' by Clark Russell; 'The Green Hand,' by George Cupples; 'Moby Dick,' by Herman Merivale; 'Tom Cringle's Log,' by Michael Scott; 'The Two Admirals,' by Fenimore Cooper; and 'Mr. Midshipman Easy,' by Captain Marryat. At this time of the year, when the mind turns gratefully to thoughts of the sea, these stories should afford particularly appropriate reading, and it need scarcely be said that each in its way is a masterpiece.

CONTINENTAL NOTES.

A valuable contribution to the knowledge of the dynastic relations subsisting between the royal family of Prussia and the Imperial family of Russia is announced for publication early in September by Salomon Hirzel, Leipzig, with the title 'Briefwechsel König Friedrich Wilhelms III. und der Königin Luise mit Kaiser Alexander I.' This collection of letters, which is now for the first time published, is preserved partly in the secret State archives at Berlin and partly in the family archives of the Imperial Russian family in the Winter Palace at St. Petersburg. Its interest and value is enhanced by the circumstance that Herr Paul Bailleu, the editor, has been able to supplement it by other manuscript materials in the handwriting of Queen Louisa of Prussia, including an account of the first meeting at Memel and her journey to St. Petersburg. The correspondence comes down to the accession of the Emperor Nicholas I. and the marriage of Prince William of Prussia, afterwards the Emperor William I., and is written in French throughout.

In September will be published 'Elisa von der Recke: Aufzeichnungen und Briefe aus ihren Jugendtagen.' Herausgegeben von Dr. Paul Rachel, in Dresden. Elisa von der Recke was one of the most renowned of German women in the last century, and was brought in contact with some of the most eminent dignitaries, statesmen, and men of letters of her time. She it was who unmasked the notorious Cagliostro, and she was also one of the first who advocated the claims of women to a better education and a more independent position than the sex then enjoyed.

'Les Romanciers Anglais contemporains' is a volume of studies of English literary celebrities, by Y. Blaze de Bury, including Rudyard Kipling, Grant Allen, W. H. Mallock, Thomas Hardy, George Meredith, Margaret Woods, and George Du Maurier. The publishers are Perrin & Co., who also announce 'Correspondance de Pasquier Quesnel, prêtre de l'Oratoire,' edited with notes by Mme. Albert Le Roy. Quesnel was a Jansenist who exiled himself to escape persecution, and whose letters contain much matter of interest on the political and religious affairs of his time.

'Les Théâtres de la Foire (1660–1789),' by Maurice Albert, forms the first volume of the new series, 'Bibliothèque Variée,' which MM. Hachette & Co. publish. M. Albert describes the popular theatres of the old fairs at Saint-Germain and Saint-Laurent, and of the Boulevard du Temple. These theatres—which seem to have been superior to those at our own fairs, such as Richardson's show—are minutely described from a literary, historical, archæological, and critical point of view. MM. Hachette also publish 'Études sur l'Antiquité Grecque,' by Henri Weill, of the Institute of France.

Referring to the recent celebration of the quint-centenary of Gutenberg's birth, the Journal d'Alsace calls attention to a memorial of the great printer existing near Strasbourg, but unknown to many of its inhabitants. 'At present,' we read, 'nothing of historical interest in this region of La Montagne Verte so powerfully recalls the great things which have happened there as a little memorial stone placed by the Reibel family in an out-of-the-way islet, the existence of which is unknown to most inhabitants of the district. This stone, partly hidden by a thick growth of shrubs and reeds, bears the following inscription: 'Hier auf dem Grünenberg wurde die Buchdruckerkunst erfunden und von hier aus wurde das Licht in die Welt verbreitet.' ('Here on the Green Mountain the art of printing was invented, and it was from here that light was shed throughout the world.')

In this connection we note that the Zeitungs-Museum in Aachen (Aix-la-Chapelle) asks all publishers of periodicals and newspapers, as well as publishers who make mention of the Gutenberg Celebration in festival numbers or essays on Gutenberg and the art of printing, to send two copies of such publications either by post or through bookselling channels to the Administration of the Zeitungs-Museum. The publications received shall be added to those already in the museum relating to Gutenberg and his discovery, and shall be preserved for the use of future inquirers.

In the Nieuwsblaad voor den Boekhandel, July 13, 'P. M.' writes:—Who has not heard the complaint from bookseller and public: 'How long will it be before this work is complete? When will the new volume be ready?' To this complaint a favourable exception, probably unique in the book-trade, is, or rather was, the 'Dictionary of National Biography'; for since January 1885, when its first volume appeared, a new volume has been published every three months with the regularity of clock-work, until, after fifteen and a half years, the work is complete in sixty-three volumes.

The Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris, has just received from Mlle. Dosne fourteen large portfolios containing papers belonging to the late Louis-Adolphe Thiers, including correspondence, notes, &c. These documents are of great interest and value from an historical and political point of view, dealing as they do with all the various governments in France, from the Bourbon restoration until the establishment of the third Republic, and treating not only of home, foreign, and colonial affairs, but also of the literary movements of the time. They constitute a really valuable acquisition to the library; but Mlle. Dosne has stipulated that they must not be delivered to the public until after her death.

A POPULAR ILLUSTRATOR.

Many readers of illustrated books and periodicals are familiar with the name and work of Mr. Joseph Pennell. He is, indeed, among the most popular illustrators of the day, and his reputation, unlike that of many contemporary artists in black and white, is international. That being the case, some particulars of his career will be of especial interest to our readers. To the Art Journal for August Mr. Arthur Thomson contributes an interesting paper on Mr. Pennell's life and work, from which we cull a few passages. Mr. Thomson refers particularly to the admirable drawings which have lately from time to time appeared in the Daily Chronicle, and proceeds: 'Perhaps the most remarkable of any work done by Mr. Pennell for a newspaper was published in the Pall Mall Gazette and in the Pall Mall Budget. Who does not remember his drawings of the Devils of Notre-Dame? How well Mr. Pennell caught the spirit of those strange monstrosities—how well he gave the eeriness of their surroundings! One cannot look at those drawings without feeling alone on some frightening height, from which the loftiest houses in the streets below seem but of the importance of dolls' houses—alone, but for a cohort of devils of the vilest shapes, some eating strange meats, some mumbling to the clouds, some sitting stolidly, like hawks, overlooking the city. There are many fine drawings in the "English Cathedrals," for which Mrs. van Rensselaer wrote the text. In not one picture has the artist failed to catch the spirit of the place. The letterpress of the book could only have been done by an American; while each cathedral appears to have been drawn by one who had lived perpetually in its neighbourhood. And how picturesquely Mr. Pennell set them forth—with what knowledge of effect! and always with such suggestive and accomplished technique.

'His cathedrals of France are even, perhaps, in some ways a greater achievement. While drawing them the artist undoubtedly acquired fresh powers. Figure-drawing, such as he wanted, ceased to be any difficulty to him, and many of the pictures of the French cathedrals are notable for their exquisite drawing of the most intricate architectural detail and architectural masses, and for the lively and characteristic groups of figures and animals that the artist displayed in the open spaces in front of these buildings.

'His pictures for "Our Sentimental Journey," for "Play in Provence," for "The River of Pleasure," and for several other books done about the same period, are all charming in the same way. They are scenes that not only have the advantage of being topographically true, but they are scenes set before us with consummate artistry, and, when the artist has added figures to them, often with much humour. But of all Mr. Pennell's pictures made for books, I think that I like best his drawings for Washington Irving's "Alhambra." Here, indeed, he found subjects that suited his genius. "Boabdil's Palace" had long been waiting for a sympathetic draughtsman, and it found one in Mr. Pennell. He seems to have revelled in the lightness and gaiety of its archways and ornament. The fame of his pictures will live now as long as the fame of the book: Irving's book and Mr. Pennell's drawings have together become one work. They have the same romance; about them there is the same sunlight; the art of each of these men is admirably suited to its respective subject.

'Etchings of different sorts, and lithographs—also of different sorts—form an important shoal in the hitherto undescribed parts of Mr. Pennell's life-work. With the etchings and lithographs Mr. Pennell has made himself absolutely familiar, and in his etchings and lithographs, as in his pen work, there is ever a fine comprehension of his subject and assured drawing.'

'For book illustration,' says Mr. Thomson, 'Mr. Pennell's favourite method of expressing himself is, certainly, with a pen; and with the pen also, it seems to me, he shows the greatest individuality. He uses it swiftly and with absolute certainty. The original drawings by Mr. Pennell that I have seen—I have seen a great number—have hardly any corrections. His drawings always appear to have been done after elaborate and experimental studies, and not, as they really are, directly from nature.' The article will interest all who are in any way concerned, whether as producers or buyers, with illustrated magazines and books. It is admirably written, and contains the best tribute we have seen to an artist whose talent verges on genius.

THE BOOK TRADE IN VIENNA.

The Neues Wiener Tagblatt recently contained the following on the present condition of the trade in the Austrian capital:—

One of the oldest bookselling establishments in one of the most frequented and fashionable squares in the centre of the city has been recently closed. The consideration of this event might lead us to melancholy reflections and variations on the endless theme, 'There are no books bought'; but that would not alter matters in the least, and the nation of writers and thinkers will not for that reason change into booksellers. Carl Julius Weber says in his 'Demokritos': 'A well chosen collection of books is and remains a dowry of the mind and heart.' We know how rare it is to find such a dowry in any house. There are houses where the bookcase is either partly or wholly used as a sideboard; and behind the dull panes of this intellectual treasury are not to be found spiritual heroes and classical writers or modern poets, but often only bottles of wine and liqueurs, the spirit of Bordeaux and of old wines. A Viennese furniture manufacturer, who had supplied a customer with the entire furniture of his house, tells us that the book-cases were sent back because the transparent glass betrayed the nakedness of the shelves and he wanted glass which was not diaphanous. How can the bookshops continue to exist if the complaints about the disinclination to book-buying be well grounded? Well, we are generally referred to certain periods of the year, Christmas time and the beginning of the school terms. Those are the principal market days. Then scientific works, and especially medical books, are bought, but polite literature—except it be the cheap publications of railway literature—are borrowed from lending libraries. The present writer recently made inquiry of several booksellers of his acquaintance and heard only bitter complaints of the state of the book trade in Vienna. It seems incredible that in the first half of July a bookseller in one of the best business quarters of Vienna had only two customers during one whole day! One of these two brave men bought a railway guide ('Conducteur') the other a touring map. The receipts on one day, which was not selected as a rarity, amounted to the magnificent sum of 3 kreutzer 60 hellers (= 10 pence)! Such facts clearly show the reason for the closing of the old Vienna bookshop already mentioned. Another Viennese bookseller says: 'The Bibliographisches Institut in Leipzig publishes Meyer's "Konversations-Lexikon," and supplies the trade with carved shelves intended for the volumes of that great reference work; the voluminous work, however, is only a deception, empty binding cases without contents, which lead one to suppose the real Meyer's Lexicon were on the bookshelves, just as wine merchants generally put only unfilled bottles in their shop windows. As these shelves have a very handsome appearance, and, as the advertisements say, are an ornament to any dwelling, it has come about that "amateurs" and buyers have been attracted by them who only wish to buy the shelves in order to use them as stands for liqueur bottles (Nippesgegenstände) or the like, but most often the demand is made for the whole case, that is, the shelves with the dummy books on them! A hint for ingenious bookbinders, who could make the most striking and comprehensive libraries on this principle at cheap prices and supply a really existing need. A third bookseller, at the conclusion of his complaints of the wretched state of trade, related a tragi-comic experience under which, perhaps, lies some hidden meaning. 'At last, about fourteen days ago, it happened that a lover of books made his appearance, and, without taking much trouble in selecting, ordered some books in polite literature to a considerable amount. I was astonished and puzzled at my pessimism, for who buys books in Vienna nowadays to the extent of two hundred gulden? But this internal conflict did not last long, for yesterday I read that the strange man was—bankrupt.'

Commenting on this article the Oesterreichische Ungarische Buchhändler Correspondenz says: 'On the whole we agree with the writer, in spite of some "poetical" exaggerations. The position of the book trade is sad. In comparison with the few good businesses there are a great number of others whose proprietors do not find the due reward for their labour or the mete profit on their capital. The causes for these phenomena are known: an excessive number of businesses, or, at any rate, unequal or mistaken local distribution of them, literary over-production and decrease of demand for reading, which is now almost exclusively met by newspapers and periodicals. We know the facts and their causes; but, unfortunately, the principal matter, the means of bettering them, we do not know.'

In this connection we may note that the popular Austrian writer, Peter Rosegger, said the other day, in his periodical Heimgarten, in reference to the question of bookbuying and pictorial post-cards: 'A family with the usual circle of acquaintances gives away four such cards weekly; if in winter fewer, in summer certainly more. For the money expended in this way yearly six to eight good books might be bought. But the answer always is the pictorial post-card makers must live! Yes, if these kind people could only realise it—the writers of books only wish to live! This inference is convincing for the man of letters, but not for the public.'

The Oesterreichische Ungarische Buchhändler Correspondenz, from which we have just quoted, thus comments on Peter Rosegger's remonstrance to the post-card purchasers: 'Rosegger overlooks the fact that the "dear reader" in German states mostly borrows and does not buy books.'

FOR STAMP COLLECTORS.

The new, considerably enlarged edition of Senf's Postage Stamp Album has just appeared. A new edition is of considerable importance in the case of a stamp album, as every year brings much new matter to be included. It is essential that everything unnecessary and superfluous, which only makes the album more cumbrous, should be dispensed with, and that what remains of real importance should be included in a systematic manner. The editor of Senf's Album regards as superfluous the shades of colour which have nothing to do with the reproduction of the stamps, and also the delicate distinctions in perforation, which are only recognised by the greatest specialists in collecting, who use a special album for the purpose. The revised edition of Senf's Postage Stamp Album answers every demand that can be made on a really good album, quite apart from the fact that it also leaves nothing to be desired with regard to external get-up, which places it in the position of a model album. The fact that no fewer than twenty-three special marks of distinction have been conferred up to the present on Senf's Postage Stamp Album will prove that it is appreciated as an excellent album in philatelic circles.

STRAY THOUGHTS OF HUMOUR FROM A LIBRARY COUNTER.

All the world knows that the librarian of the circulating library is the most harassed individual in existence. But his life is sometimes lightened by the unconscious humour of odd subscribers. Well is it for the librarian who can extract some fun from his calling, for—and I speak feelingly—he has much need of diversion when assailed by a bevy of up-to-date ladies, all clamouring for the newest book, and giving unmistakable evidence of wrath if they are disappointed.

Not that the ladies are always to blame in this matter, but as 'librarians' worries' I would give them first place. Who has not met with the dear, spectacled, tottering old lady, deficient of hearing and generally accompanied by a wheezy pug-dog, who pants up to the counter, heedless of those already waiting, and makes her desires known in a shrill voice, and with the consciousness of the homage due to her age and infirmities? Her impressive 'young man'! is a lesson in womanly dignity, and what librarian could fail to join in the general titter when she exhorts the 'young man' to be careful in future, and not send her books with swear words in them, adding as a rider that 'Crawford's books are rubbish, but I don't mind Kipling now and again!'

One crank, I know, a Scotsman, once nearly went blue with rage because, he averred, I hadn't sent him the 'QUAIRTERLY in Febreeary and March.' It took ten solid minutes to drive into his snuff-clogged brain that the Quarterly was a Quarterly, and then he went away growling.

Where such a multitude of titles exist, it is but natural that some get twisted and turned about until almost unrecognisable. One meets with it often, and some are funny in the extreme. In this connection it was amusing to note the capabilities of Miss Harraden's first book. Sometimes it was 'Ships that Foundered in the Night,' or they would 'Collide in the Night,' and, generally speaking, would accommodate themselves as only trusty barques could to many wonderful and soul-stirring scenes, but in the early days they were hardly ever 'Ships that Pass in the Night.'

One dear soul once came in brimful of a desire to obtain a book that a friend had recommended—'a beautiful book, too'—but the title and author's name were a myth to her; all she knew about it was that it was about Monday. Repeated solicitation made her waver nothing; she was sure it wasn't about Tuesday or Wednesday, or any other day of the week. The poor mortal serving her did his best, but the book on 'Monday,' author unknown, came not to his mind, and the lady went her way sorrowful. A few days later in she came, her countenance radiant as a sunlit poppy in a cornfield, and the librarian knew, with an instinctive thrill of delight, that the title was found which had been lost—it was 'Gloria Mundi'! Another great source of fun is to be found among that class of subscriber, full of gush and with the instinct of the littérateur oozing, so to speak, from their very finger-tips, who can't read Marion Crawford, you know, because they really can't read books written by women, and who speak of Sydney Grier and John Strange Winter as 'he.' One could pass these trifling errors over were the joke not accentuated by their fervid declarations, to any stranger whom they deem fit subjects for their confidences, that their knowledge of authors, publishers' tricks, and booksellers' little ways is wide and accurate.

Apart from subscribers, however, the librarian may sometimes extract a little harmless fun out of his assistant. I have no doubt that many have heard of the bumptious young man who referred an enquirer for 'Berna Boyle' to another shop as 'they didn't keep cookery books' on loan!

Sometimes a young assistant, with an excessive desire to be of service, will perpetrate a funny blunder. One working with me, upon enquiry for books of Eastern travel, brought Hissey's 'Tour in a Phaeton through the Eastern Counties,' and failed to see why the subscriber should immoderately laugh; and on another occasion he suggested, in quite good faith, Mrs. Chetwynd's 'Bees and Butterflies' as a good book on insects, at any rate 'it must be better than Lubbock's "Ants, Bees, and Wasps," for it went out oftener,' but he knows better now. And so I might continue; these quaint things help to vary the monotony, and although most poor beggars who earn a crust behind the circulating library counter wear a worried look, there are times when a wan smile comes, when the sunshine of a joke pierces the gloom.

W. J. R.

A LIFE OF DUTY.

In these days of wars and rumours of wars we constantly hear and read of deeds of heroism and of lives ungrudgingly sacrificed in the service of Queen and country. Such deeds make our hearts beat with a not unnatural feeling of pride in our brave fellow citizens throughout the empire, and of well-grounded hope in that empire's future. Nevertheless it is well to be reminded by such books as Mr. Williams's 'Life of Sir James Douglass' * that opportunities for heroism and self-sacrifice are not withheld from any man, whether engaged in purely civil or in military enterprises.

James Nicholas Douglass, born at Bow in Middlesex in 1826, was the son of Mr. Nicholas Douglass, who, having saved money in the employ of a firm of engineers, started in business as a builder of river steamboats on the Thames. Being at that time the only undertaking of the kind, there was every prospect of success. Unfortunately there was a partner in the firm, who absconded with Mr. Douglass's well-earned savings. The blow was terrible, but bravely borne by both father and son. Of James, who was then but a twelve-year-old boy, it at once made a man. He and his brother William (since 1878 Engineer-in-Chief to the Commissioner of Irish Lights) were devoted sons, and when Mr. Nicholas became connected with the Trinity House the two boys accompanied their parent wherever their father's duties called him. While they diligently pursued the studies needed to fit them for their father's profession, 'they early learned (says Mr. Williams) to swim, to row and sail a boat, to despise danger and hardness—all such excellent preparations for the life of strenuous enterprise that lay before them.'

It is such a life of strenuous enterprise that Mr. Williams places before his readers in this excellent story of the career of a self-made man. James Douglass began work in the service of the Trinity House in 1847, when he became assistant to his father in erecting a lighthouse on the ill-omened Bishop rock, Scilly, identified with the sad shipwreck of the brave Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel in 1707, and the more recent loss of the ill-fated 'Schiller.' The difficulties arising from the situation of this dangerous rock and the force of the Atlantic to the carrying out of this enterprise are vividly described. The next most important undertaking of the Trinity Corporation was the construction of a granite lighthouse in place of a quaint wooden structure on the rocks called the Smalls, off Milford Haven. Of this apparently hazardous work Mr. Douglass had the sole control. Here the reader begins to realise not only the dangers of lighthouse building, but also the difficulties experienced by one supervising the work of subordinates; and learns to appreciate the sterling qualities of the hero of this book, who succeeded in establishing and maintaining the most friendly and cordial relations with his staff and with the inhabitants of the Welsh village, Solva, where he and his men resided from 1856 to 1861, and where he is still affectionately remembered.

Space fails to trace further Sir James's career, or to enumerate the many valuable monuments of his skill and energy he successively executed, for one of which, the new Eddystone Lighthouse, he received the honour of knighthood. Mr. Williams writes, as the subject of his biography worked, con amore, and has included in this excellent biography a brief yet extremely interesting account of the origin and beneficent work of that admirable corporation of the Trinity House to which 'they who go down to the sea in ships' owe so much. This biography is admirably suited for presentation.

THE DISSATISFIED BOOKSELLER.

Last week there appeared in the Daily Chronicle what we cannot help characterising as an extraordinary interview with a bookseller on bookselling.

'It is astounding to note,' he told the interviewer, 'how the popular taste has gone back. I hope the time will never come in England when nothing but fiction will be published, but upon my word it is beginning to look as if such a calamity were a possibility of the distant future. The greed of people for novels quite distresses a man who knows that the novels published to-day are mostly trash. Most of my business is done in novels, and I'm sorry for the fact. It points to the intellectual degeneracy of the race.'

'Are the classics bought now: the English classics, I mean?'

'Yes; there is a steady sale for them. No house of any pretence to culture can afford to be without Shakespeare, Milton, Wordsworth, Boswell, Thackeray, and Tennyson—not to mention any more names. These are necessary authors. You will be surprised to hear that the demand for Byron is daily increasing. If the demand goes on Byron will overtop all the other English classics in popularity. Perhaps the new cult of Byron is a reflection of the love of the frivolous and the fictitious which marks the present year. The religious novel? If published now it would be a dead failure. "Quo Vadis" was not a religious novel; it was a picture, and a very brilliant one, of Rome under Nero.'

'Is the publishing trade busy?'

'No; nothing doing. Look at this bulletin of new books, the bi-weekly list circulated among the booksellers. I've never seen the list so scanty. It's positively phenomenal. The cause of it? Why, the war. I attribute the decline of the publishing trade to that source alone.' This gentleman's remark that 'most of my business is done in novels, and I'm sorry for the fact,' reminds one of the burglar's plea that he detested 'burgling, but a fellow must live.' The whole tone of the interview suggests thoughts which we need not at present express. But we shall be glad to have the opinions of booksellers in general on the views of this sorrowful member of the trade.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. T. & T. Clark.—'Luther and the German Reformation,' by Thomas M. Lindsay, D.D. This, the latest volume in 'The World's Epoch-makers' series, edited by Oliphant Smeaton, differs somewhat from the many other lives previously written of the great reformer in that it seeks to represent Luther 'in the environment of the common social life of his time,' rather than as epoch-maker alone. Professor Lindsay points out that the sixteenth century, in which Luther was the most outstanding figure, saw the beginnings of our present social life in almost everything, and it has seemed to him that if he could show what that life was and the position occupied by the reformer in it, he would have done something to bring his subject appreciably nearer to us. This, then, has been the predominant guiding thought in the writer's mind, and within the limited space at his disposal he may be said to have produced a very interesting, readable volume, in which old material has been refurbished to present quite a new face, and several new topics for consideration have been introduced. 'Luther,' the author concludes, 'is the type of the best German manhood, in his patient industry, his enjoyment of quiet home life among wife and bairns, his love of music, and his power to kindle when occasion arises into that slow burning life which consumes opposition. Dead these long centuries ago, he is still living in the German nation.' In the words of Döllinger, 'he has stamped the imperishable seal of his soul alike upon the German language and the German mind,' so that 'even those Germans who abhor him most as the powerful heretic and the seducer of the nation, cannot escape; they must discourse with his words, they must think with his thoughts.'

From Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co.—'The Story of Moscow,' by Wirt Gerrare, illustrated by Helen M. James. The earlier history of Moscow—that is, before the eighteenth century—is, as Mr. Gerrare points out, not so well known but that this account of the town and its vicissitudes will come to many readers with the charm of novelty. In a very modest preface the author claims only to have been the intelligent collector of other people's researches; at the best his task has been but to examine, compare, and judge the work of others, and from their stored treasures make his selection. This may be so, but the bricks being supplied it is not every one that can build a house, and much praise is due to Mr. Gerrare for the efficient way in which he has welded together his material. The volume supplies a very interesting, deftly written description of the old Muscovite capital, the story being taken up at the [illegible] and a cordial word of praise should be given to the general production of the volume, [illegible] the Kentucky mountains. Here Clayton, the hero, has come to superintend some mineral mines, the property of his father in Jersey. One day, while exploring the neighbourhood, he comes across a strange spectacle—a girl mounted on the back of a bull, which is apparently carrying her as steadily as any horse would do. She is very attractive in a healthy, physical sense, but, as may be supposed from her surroundings, quite uneducated. From this point the story proceeds on familiar lines, though the author, by a certain charm of style, never loses his hold on the reader. Clayton falls in love with the beautiful Easter, and has a rival in one of the rough miners named Raines. He is really greatly attached to the girl, but it is easy to perceive that, with a man of his superior position and refinement, the foundation for his affection must be largely physical. Eventually he leaves the mines and returns home, but remembrances of Easter and the thought that he is not treating her well cause him again to seek her out. They are engaged to be married. Easter has a very objectionable father, who after the consumption of any liquor becomes almost mad, and during the wedding night festivities—the ceremony being performed in primitive fashion by the unsuccessful rival—he attempts to shoot the bridegroom, but instead kills his own daughter, who rushes forward to protect her husband and receives the shot instead. Some such ending as this the experienced novel reader will no doubt expect when he has got half way through the book. It is the usual way of terminating a difficulty of this kind. But, as we have already pointed out, the story has attractions of style which will cause any defects of construction to be readily forgiven.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers.—'A Moun[illegible]

From Mr. William Heinemann.—'Sport in War,' by Major-General R. S. S. Baden-Powell, F.R.G.S. The sketches in this volume have been reprinted from the Badminton Magazine, and they are prefaced by a few words from Mr. Alfred E. T. Watson, the editor of that periodical. Each page is also surrounded by a deep green border which may have its uses, but can neither be termed artistic or pretty. We sincerely hope that this is an innovation that will not be followed by other publishers. As for the sketches themselves they are bright and vivacious, and are written with that keen sense of personal enjoyment which is certain to commend them to the favourable notice of sportsmen, the subjects being big-game hunting (as an accompaniment of 'scouting'), a run with the Cape foxhounds, pig sticking, &c. One of the sketches, 'The Ordeal of the Spear,' takes the form of a story, and relates how two military men in love with the same girl agreed to put their claims to the test of a pig-sticking contest, the victor having the first right of proposal. Unfortunately the lady herself was accidentally killed while watching the sport, and the rivals were thus turned into fellow mourners. There are a large number of full-page illustrations which testify in no slight degree to the artistic skill of the author, and show what a good all-round man he is.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Horseless Vehicles, Automobiles, Motor Cycles, operated by Steam, Hydrocarbon, Electric, and Pneumatic Motors: a Practical Treatise on the Development, Use, and Care of the Automobile, including a Special Chapter on How to Build an Electric Cab, with detail [illegible] by Gardiner D. Hiscox, M.E.

Aided by a large number of illustrations, the author has given a most exhaustive description of horseless vehicles in this volume, and has apparently penetrated into every branch of the subject. Commencing with the usual historical survey, he next proceeds to discuss steam automobile motor appliances, the specialities in their construction, steam propelled vehicles, horseless vehicles with explosive motors, electric ignition devices, atomising carburetors, gasoline motor carriages, and so forth. Throughout Mr. Hiscox shows a complete mastery over his subject, especially observable when he comes to write of the more technical side of the question. His book should prove of great interest not only to the general reader (for whom it is principally intended), but to those more scientifically connected with the motor car industry.

From Messrs. Methuen & Co.—'Westminster Abbey,' by G. E. Troutbeck, illustrated by F. D. Bedford. To treat exhaustively such a subject as Westminster Abbey within the confines of this little volume would naturally be an impossibility, and accordingly we are not surprised to find that its chief aim is to serve as a popular guide, while as an outcome of this it is hoped 'to arouse interest in the further study of our most famous national monument, our most sacred and beautiful place of worship.' The author opens his work with a brief but interesting sketch of the abbey history, and in succeeding chapters he deals with the architecture, the tombs of the founders, the Chapel of the Kings, the Sacrarium and choir, the South Ambulatory and chapels, Henry VIII.'s chapel, the North Ambulatory and chapels, the North Transept, the South Transept, the Nave, Cloisters, Chapter House, Deanery, Jerusalem Chamber, Sanctuary, &c. By the use of small type he is enabled to pack a large amount of serviceable information into narrow compass, and thus the book is easily adaptable to the pocket. The illustrations represent some of the more distinctive features of the abbey.

From Mr. John Murray.—'A Gift from the Grave,' by Edith Wharton. This is a very different story from the first of Mr. Murray's popular series of novels, 'The Compleat Bachelor,' noticed in a recent number of the PUBLISHERS' CIRCULAR; and yet, though lacking its brilliancy and trenchant humour, Miss Wharton's work is almost equally clever. It is the narrative of a man who sells for publication the private letters of a dead and distinguished woman friend in order that he may marry another. For these letters a large sum is obtainable—so much as £10,000 is hinted at!—and the temptation is great. Afterwards, when he is happily married, the consciousness of the despicable action he has been guilty of troubles him. Moreover, the only man who has a partial knowledge of the circumstances—his partner in the transaction, so to speak—is a frequent visitor at the house, and the unfortunate husband suspects him, under cloak of this knowledge, of making love to his wife. The agony intensifies, more especially as the wife comes to know of the secret through some papers carelessly left about. The husband now feels that she must have a thorough contempt for him. However, matters eventually come right, though how we must leave readers the pleasure of finding out. It is a clever story, of a style that may distinctly be termed modern, the actual substance being not nearly so weighty as the method of treatment would have one suppose.

From the same.—'Personal Narrative of Occurrences during Lord Elgin's Second Embassy to China in 1860,' by the late Henry Brougham Loch (Lord Loch), sometime

[illegible] your subscriptions to WM. DAWSON & SONS, [illegible]

Private Secretary to the Earl of Elgin. At a time like the present, when affairs in China occupy so large a portion of the world's attention, it is as well that we should consider not only the more recent events that have led up to the present crisis, but the state of matters that existed some time previously, and that no doubt contained the undeveloped germ of the present trouble. In this respect, therefore, the issue of a third edition of Lord Loch's book is exceedingly opportune. It will, we are sure, be read with great interest by those who are wishful to obtain a complete mastery over the national characteristics that have contributed to the complications now existing, and we are equally certain that it will tend to a more enlightened, broader-minded view of the situation.

From G. P. Putnam's Sons.—'The Synoptic Gospels, together with a Chapter of the Text-Criticism of the New Testament,' by George Lovell Cary, A.M., L.H.D., President of the Meadville Theological School. This is the first of a series of four volumes gathered together under the general title of 'International Handbooks to the New Testament,' edited by Orello Cone, D.D. Special attention is paid to the doctrinal and practical side of the question rather than to a minute examination of the grammatical construction of passages of minor importance. The main object is to furnish a series of Handbooks to the New Testament which shall 'meet the wants of the general reader, and at the same time present the results of the latest scholarship and of the most thorough critical investigation.' Bearing this object in mind, there is every evidence that Professor Cary has accomplished his task with insight and critical skill; and though sometimes the meaning is a little obscured, through a style of literary expression not quite familiar to readers on our side of the Atlantic, this is a difficulty that gradually diminishes the further we penetrate into the book, and eventually it entirely disappears. Students of theology and readers generally will find much in this volume to instruct and interest them.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'The Descent of the Duchess,' by Morley Roberts. The author has in this story entered the domain of amusing extravagance, not untinged with vulgarity. The young Duchess of Teviotdale is tired of moving in the respectable world to which her late elderly husband so preeminently belonged—tired of meeting the same regulation-pattern people day by day, with their detestable stereotyped manners; and longs for the unconventional and true. So she decides to visit America, 'the Land of the Free, where the mighty Missouri runs down to the sea.' As she is a woman of high position and immense wealth, her peculiar opinions and the decision she has come to soon get noised abroad, with the result that she and her relatives are obliged to cross the Atlantic in a yacht to escape the crowd of admirers who are anxious to accompany her by steamer. Arrived in the land of Freedom, she soon finds that her reputation has travelled before her, and that the newspaper reporters will allow her no peace. She therefore escapes from Baltimore, and in a special railway car speeds West. But one night, awful to relate, when she has stolen, attired in the lightest of apparel, from her sleeping berth and is leaning upon the outside rail of the car, the miserable structure gives way and she is precipitated—not into the back-waters of the Mississippi, which they are at that moment crossing, but into the extended sail of the hay-laden flat boat of old Nathan Chadd and his three sons, who are floating out for Hickory Chunk. Having now reached a delicate point in the narrative, we must leave our readers to find out the results of this terribly unfortunate accident for themselves. The interest of the narrative is briskly kept up to the conclusion, and throughout Mr. Roberts has almost daringly exhibited the inclination of the Duchess for the natural order of conduct rather than the conventional.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'A Prince of Swindlers,' by Guy Boothby. It can scarcely be wondered at if the leading character of this novel presented, to use the words of the author, a 'unique appearance.' It is certainly not given to every man to have a countenance of remarkable Greek-like beauty, the nose of a Napoleon, and eyes resembling those of a collie dog; but then Simon Carne was a being of extraordinary mental attributes, and it was but natural that his appearance should bear some kind of relationship to his inner self. The story goes to show how this clever thief (swindler seems something of a misnomer) came over to this country from India, and executed a most brilliant series of robberies on the British aristocracy, being aided in his career by the good luck which had made him acquainted with the Viceroy, and thus enabled him to enter London society. In the matter of fearlessness, ingenuity, and resource, Simon Carne well deserves his title of 'prince' among burglars. Nothing seems to daunt him, no obstacle is so great that he is unable to surmount it. His disguises alone are well-nigh marvellous—at one time a hunchback (movable hump), then a clergyman, next a disreputable beggar, farm labourer, police-inspector, and so forth. It should be stated that all the time he is carrying on his nefarious schemes he is living at Porchester House in Park Lane, and posing before fashionable society as a man of great wealth. The said nefarious schemes include the robbery of the Duchess of Wiltshire's incomparable diamonds, the theft of a Derby favourite, the disappearance of some seventy thousand pounds' worth of wedding presents, and other gigantic frauds. Readers are certainly not likely to suffer from any want of excitement while perusing the account of Simon Carne's doings. And the worst of it is the scoundrel manages to leave this country free and unfettered, with the proud consciousness that he and his chief confederate, a man servant, have had a glorious time of it, and are carrying away any amount of solid cash.

From Messrs. F. V. White & Co.—'An Eye for an Eye: a Mystery,' by William Le Queux. For a story of pure, unadulterated sensationalism, told in a bright vivacious style that disguises much of its improbability, commend us to the author of this volume. 'An Eye for an Eye' will hold the reader enthralled from first page to last, and when the mystery has been fully explained to him, he will wonder why on earth he became so excited over such an unnatural piece of melodrama. The plot concerns a strange murder committed at a house in the Kensington Road, facing Holland Park, a man and woman being found dead, amid a pleasant surrounding of snakes, peculiar vapours, bubbling chemicals, and other appropriate features. The excitement is intensified by the fact that between the visit of the police-inspector who first discovered the crime and the arrival on the scene of his superior officer, the body of the woman is mysteriously carried away and substituted by another. From this time forth curiosity as to the perpetrators of the murder becomes overwhelming, and a merry, feverish dance the author leads his readers, turning and doubling in the most adroit fashion, and ever contriving that when their interest is inclined to droop in the one direction it shall receive fresh stimulus in another. We feel grateful to Mr. Le Queux for a couple of hours' exciting reading on an evening that would otherwise have been exceedingly monotonous.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

JACKSON'S U.P. PENS

Specially adapted for Elegant and Rapid Writing, and for all Styles of Penmanship

THE great demand for these Pens has suggested the production of two extra kinds of the same size and shape as the No. 4 Corresponding Pen, which is such a general favourite. The New G Nib is characterised by a greater fineness and flexibility, so that for those who indulge in fine writing and for Shorthand Writers it will be found unsurpassed. The New J Pen, with a broad but still somewhat flexible point, is richly gilt, and is eminently adapted for large bold styles of Penmanship, being peculiarly suitable for Ladies, whether they write vertically or obliquely. No more durable and delightful pen need be desired.

A Sample Box, containing a Quarter Gross Assorted Pens, sent post-free on receipt of seven penny stamps.

'Unquestionably capital pens. . . . Beautifully soft and fluent writing pens.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

WORKS ON CHEMISTRY

By R. L. TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S.

Teacher of Chemistry and Physics in the Central Higher Grade School, Manchester, and Headmaster of the Central Evening School of Science and Art, Manchester.

CHEMISTRY FOR BEGINNERS.

Adapted for the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations in Organic Chemistry. Fifth Edition, enlarged. Illustrated. With 200 Questions and Problems. Crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.* APPENDIX—EXERCISES IN PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY: MOSTLY QUANTITATIVE. Crown 8vo. 24 pp., paper covers, 6*d.*

'Covers the whole ground of the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examination, and forms generally an excellent introduction to the study of Chemistry, the explanations of chemical phenomena being unusually full.'—SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

THE STUDENT'S CHEMISTRY.

Adapted for the Advanced Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations, the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations, the London University Examinations, &c. With over 600 Questions and Problems, Tables and Spectra, &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 360 pages, 5*s.* With KEY to Problems, 6*s.* 6*d.*

'Mr. Taylor has hit the mark well in his attempt to produce a text-book of chemistry for students who wish to reach the level of the advanced stage of the Science and Art Department. While he has been careful not to include too much mere detail, he has not thereby rendered his manual incomplete or insufficient. He has endeavoured to make his descriptions of methods and explanations of reactions quite up to date. The concluding chapters set forth the principal theories in such a way as to enable the student to grasp their import readily.'
SCHOOLMASTER.

CHEMICAL PROBLEMS WITH SOLUTIONS.

Being the Key to the Problems in 'Chemistry for Beginners' and 'The Student's Chemistry.' By R. L. TAYLOR and S. PARRISH, A.R.C.S. (London), Teacher of Chemistry in the Central Higher Grade School, Leeds. Crown 8vo, cloth, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'This is the complement of Mr. Taylor's "Student's Chemistry." Full and intelligible solutions of the problems in the latter work are given.'—SCHOOLMASTER.

ANALYSIS TABLES FOR CHEMICAL STUDENTS.

By JOHN MILLS, F.R.A.S.

ALTERNATIVE ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY.

Being a Course of Lessons adapted to the requirements of the New Syllabus of Chemistry recently instituted by the Science and Art Department. With a Preface by Professor THORPE, F.R.S. Illustrated with 65 Drawings. Crown 8vo. 104 pages, cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'It is a practical and businesslike manual, clear in its description, and illustrated by a number of serviceable diagrams.'—SCOTSMAN.

CHEMISTRY FOR STUDENTS.

ANSWERS TO EXAMINATION QUESTIONS.

ANSWERS TO EXAMINATION QUESTIONS IN CHEMISTRY.

Theoretical and Practical. Ordinary Course, 1887–91 inclusive. Crown 8vo. boards, 1*s.*

'These experiments, based upon the syllabus of the Elementary Stage of Practical Inorganic Chemistry, will well repay the careful attention of students entering for this examination. The descriptions and hints are clear and thorough, and the arrangement leaves nothing to be desired.'
SCHOOLMASTER.

By T. HANDS, M.A.

NUMERICAL EXERCISES IN INORGANIC CHEMISTRY.

Crown 8vo. 2*s.*; with the Answers, 2*s.* 6*d.*; Answers separately, 6*d.*

August 31, 1900.

The conclusion of the holiday season is now within sight, and perhaps some slight survey of the output of books during the summer may not be without interest. The first thing that strikes the inquirer is their large number. Despite the prevalence of bad trade, despite the fact that war news is supposed to have entirely engrossed the attention of readers, every week has seen the publication of quite a small library of volumes. The mind naturally wonders where they all go to, who purchases them. The reading public, large as it now is, must be particularly voracious in its appetite if it can comfortably dispose of all the literary food thus provided for its consumption. Possibly the warm weather, while promoting a feeling of lazy contentment, also fosters a partiality for light literature. This may be so, but so far as holiday makers go we do not remember to have been particularly struck by the large number of books they carry about with them when railway travelling, nor have we remarked in our peregrinations along pier or promenade that the majority of the visitors are deeply interested in the pages of a novel. Foiled in this direction, the mind makes a fresh start. A considerable proportion of the reading world is unable to take any holidays at all, or at best only enjoy a short respite from work. These then are the people who principally support the publication of summer literature, and in dawdling over the pages of the latest fiction obtain a lazy relief from the heat of the weather. This certainly sounds more probable than the other cause, and if we add to it the tremendous growth in the number of book readers from the spread of education and increase of population we shall no doubt have arrived at a correct solution of the problem.

The next feature to attract attention is the character of these summer publications; and of course there is embodied in this the still wider question of what is the most popular form of literature for summer reading. Naturally it must be something light, but should it be biography, travel, descriptive essay, or fiction? The answer, as gleaned from our record of books published during the last three months, is undoubtedly in favour of fiction. At least one in every three volumes has been a novel. Fiction, of course, at any time of the year predominates in the number of publications, but during the summer it reaches its highest percentage. There are readers who prefer to hear of rippling streams, shady dells, and country lanes, but they are distinctly in a minority. The reading world generally only cares for fiction. This may roughly be divided into three varieties—the humorous, the social, and the sensational. Perhaps no better example of the first two attributes could be brought forward than 'The Compleat Bachelor,' published by Mr. John Murray. It is almost an ideal example of the summer novel, bright, amusing, gently exercising the intellect without subjecting it to any strenuous effort. But the book will be caviare to many on account of its keen analytical qualities. The sensational novel is apparently the one that more accurately hits the popular taste. Of this variety there have been a large number. But we notice that there is a visible decline in quality. Everything—character portraiture, literary style, probability—is given up to the demand for exciting incident. Crime nowadays occupies the basis of most sensational novels, and its elucidation is worked out in the most crudely sensational fashion. But in these matters the majority of readers, judging by the supply of such novels, do not appear to be particularly exacting, and the neat workmanship of such a master-hand as the late Wilkie Collins appears to be a lost quality.

The general deduction derived from a survey of the summer's books would seem to be that the reading public, harassed by the hot weather, has scarcely energy enough to be critical. All that is required is something that shall arouse them from their state of languor. In much the same way as the old Anglo-Indian seeks his highly spiced condiments, so the summer reader craves after some form of thrilling literature, no matter how roughly constructed, which shall momentarily awaken a sense of vitality. He likes to hear of daring burglaries, mysterious murders, secret conspirators, unscrupulous adventurers, fascinating but treacherous women, and all the other strongly marked characters that go to make up the sensational writer's stock in trade. It is not a particularly intellectual craving, but after all he is only a summer reader, and perhaps by the time the winter comes, with its strengthening frost and snow, he may have recovered his mental balance and be prepared to devote his mind to higher fiction and those weighty tomes which he is assured are all for his benefit, but which seem so deadly dull in the reading.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Jurors of the Paris Exhibition have awarded a Grand Prix to the Collective Exhibit of Books organised by the Publishers' Association, with the assistance of Sir E. Maunde Thompson, K.C.B., and Mr. F. Macmillan, for the Liberal Arts Sub-Committee of the Royal British Commission.

The ninth edition of Professor T. E. Holland's 'Elements of Jurisprudence,' now passing through the Clarendon Press, is to be published immediately in this country and in the United States. The new edition has been carefully revised to date, and will be found to contain new matter of considerable interest.

Among the works that Mr. George Allen has in the press are 'The True and False Christ,' by Colonel Garnier; 'Oxford University Sermons,' arranged for the Church's year and edited by Professor Bebb; 'The Holy Days: Vignettes in Verse,' by the Rev. J. Gregory Smith; and 'Roses of Paestum: Essays on Mediæval Italy,' by Edward McCurdy.

Messrs. Eyre & Spottiswoode will publish early this month a work entitled 'The Leaguer of Ladysmith,' by Captain Clive Dixon, of the 16th Lancers, and Aide-de-Camp to General Sir George White. It will consist of a series of water-colour sketches reproduced by lithography. These sketches were made by the author during the four months he spent in the besieged town.

Mr. Filson Young's book, 'The Relief of Mafeking,' which Messrs. Methuen & Co. will publish almost immediately, contains an account of the work accomplished by Mahon's flying column and its relief of Mafeking. A description is also given of the defeat of Colonel Villebois and his death. The book deals, in the main, with incidents of the war which have not previously been described in any other work.

A new and important addition will be made by Messrs. Longmans & Co. to the 'Fur, Feather, and Fin' series at an early date. This will be a volume on 'Pike and Perch,' from the pen of the popular 'Redspinner,' otherwise known as Mr. William Senior, editor of the Field. The book will also contain chapters by 'John Bickerdyke' and Mr. W. H. Pope, with a special contribution from Mr. Alexander Innes Shand on the subject of 'cookery.' There will be several illustrations, both original and from photographs.

Mr. Austin Dobson will edit the new edition of Leigh Hunt's 'Old Court Suburb,' illustrated by Mr. Herbert Railton and Mr. Edmund J. Sullivan, which Mr. Freemantle will publish in the autumn. Each chapter will be brought up to date, and the book will contain reproductions of the fashion plates of the period. One of the chief features of the volume will be the large number of photogravure illustrations and pen-and-ink portraits of the various persons mentioned in the text. These will be done by Mr. E. J. Sullivan.

Mr. George Manville Fenn's curiously named novel 'The Bag of Diamonds and Three Bits of Paste' will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus about the second week in October, and very soon afterwards they will have ready Mrs. Campbell Praed's new story 'As a Watch in the Night.' They are also making extensive additions to their three-and-sixpenny editions. The Christmas number of the Gentleman's Magazine will this year be written by Mr. T. W. Speight, and will bear the title of 'The Strange Experiences of Mr. Verschoyle.'

A new and important work on 'Armenia,' by Mr. H. F. B. Lynch, will shortly be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. The book is principally a record of the author's recent and extensive travels in that country, and is an attempt to enlarge our knowledge of its geography and physical features. At the same time Mr. Lynch inquires closely into the condition of the population, and deals with those problems of an economical and political character which are likely in the future to occupy the attention of Europe even more closely than they have done in the past. The two volumes will contain more than two hundred illustrations, reproduced from photographs taken by the author, plans of mountains, ancient sites, &c.

Mr. Grant Richards will publish on the 4th of this month a new novel by Mr. Oswald Crawfurd, entitled 'The New Order,' a Novel of To-day. Mr. Oswald Crawfurd has not published any work of fiction since his 'Sylvia Arden.'

Mr. Joseph Hocking's new story, 'In Male Attire,' to be published shortly by Messrs. Hutchinson, will have a hero from the western frontier of America and a heroine from the busy region of Fleet Street, London. The main incident of the story—the impersonation by the heroine of a gold-miner in the wilds of Colorado—is understood to be true.

Mr. Charles Dixon's new work, 'The Story of the Birds: an Introduction to the Study of Ornithology,' will be published by Mr. George Allen at an early date. It will contain a frontispiece in colour by Charles Whymper.

An entirely new 'two-version' edition of the Bible will be published next month by Mr. Henry Frowde, Oxford University Press. The Authorised Version has been printed with all the differences of the Revised Version placed in the side margins, so that both texts can be read from the same page, while in the centre column are the indispensable marginal references. When the simple plan followed by the printers has been mastered every difference between the two versions, including even punctuation, can be recognised with readiness and certitude. The 'two-version' edition will be procurable with or without the Oxford Helps to the Study of the Bible. The Bishop of Gloucester contributes a preface in which he speaks very highly of the general character of the work.

The September number of the Nineteenth Century is especially interesting, and almost every subject at present engaging public attention is treated of in its pages. Thus Mr. Edmund Robertson, Q.C., late Civil Lord of the Admiralty, writes of '"Business Principles" in the Public Service,' Professor Max Müller treats of 'The Religions of China,' and Colonel Lonsdale Hale discusses 'The Staff Work in the War.' Other articles calling for mention are 'The Situation in Italy,' by Signor Giovanni dalla Vecchia; 'Our Allies at Waterloo,' by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P.,; 'American Imperialism,' by Bradley Martin, Jun.; 'The Burden of Coal,' by Benjamin Taylor; and 'The South African War Hospitals,' by Murray Guthrie, M.P.

Among the new fiction announced by Messrs. Longmans & Co. is a novel by Mrs. L. B. Walford, 'One of Ourselves.' Florence and Bertha Upton will also continue the popular 'Golliwogg' series, the volume for Christmas 1900 (to be published in October) being entitled 'The Golliwogg's Polar Adventures.' It will contain upwards of ninety coloured plates.

The important work on 'Turner and Ruskin' which has engaged Mr. Frederick Wedmore's energies for some time past will be issued by Mr. George Allen in October. The book is an exposition of the work of Turner, with descriptive and critical passages from the writings of John Ruskin. It will be illustrated with about 90 plates in photogravure, reproduced from the original pictures in the possession of Mr. Ruskin and many other well-known collectors of Turner in this country. Only a limited edition will be printed.

Mr. Robert Anning Bell, whose illustrations to 'A Midsummer Night's Dream' attracted much favourable attention a year or two ago, has illustrated 'The Tempest' on a somewhat more elaborate scale, and the play will be published by Mr. Freemantle.

Mr. Heinemann has addressed a letter to the trade, pointing out that a libel action has been commenced by the Netherlands South African Railway Company against Mr. FitzPatrick and himself on account of certain statements made in 'The Transvaal from Within'; that he shall defend the case and will continue to issue the work; and that pending the action he shall hold booksellers harmless for their part in its circulation.

We are not surprised to find that Miss Wakeman's 'Autobiography of a Charwoman,' published by Mr. Macqueen, has run into a second edition. When reviewing the book in these columns, it was pointed out that there was a grim reality in the recital of this poor charwoman's life that was certain to awaken the sympathies of readers. Mr. Macqueen also announces the publication next month of a new novel by Dr. Maurus Jokai, dealing with the Hungarian revolution of 1848. It is entitled 'The Baron's Sons.'

Mr. R. N. Stephen's new novel, 'Philip Winwood: a Sketch of the Domestic History of an American Captain in the War of Independence,' will be issued by Messrs. Chatto & Windus on September 20. A week later the same firm will publish Mr. William Westall's latest work of fiction, 'As Luck would have it.'

The September number of the Century Magazine, published by Messrs. Macmillan & Co., contains an important article by the Rev. Dr. D. Z. Sheffield, President of the North China College and Mission at Tungchau, near Pekin, under the title of 'The Influence of the Western World on China.' As a result of the author's thirty years' experience as a missionary, he argues strongly against the dismemberment of the Middle Kingdom. Another timely paper is 'The Revolution in China and its Causes,' by R. Van Bergen.

In their well-known 'Temple Classics' Messrs. J. M. Dent & Co. have issued Hazlitt's 'Lectures on the English Comic Writers'; and the first volumes of 'The Romance of the Rose,' by W. Lorris and J. Clopinet, 'englished' by F. S. Ellis; and 'Macaulay's Essays.' Each of these works is produced with that close attention to printing, paper and binding which has rendered the series such a great and popular success.

Mr. William Dunnett, who for nearly forty years has represented Messrs. Thomas Nelson & Son in the West and Midland counties, has retired, and will be succeeded by Mr. H. H. Chatterton, lately in the employment of Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.

The new number of the Studio is excellent, and its reputation for high-class artistic work is thoroughly maintained. Among the more important articles are 'James Aumonier and his Work,' by Mrs. Arthur Bell; 'The Decorations of the Peninsular and Oriental Pavilion at the Paris Exhibition,' and an appreciative review of the work of 'Emil Orlik,' the painter, by Richard Muther. 'Studio Talk' thoroughly maintains its interest, and the 'supplementary' plates given with the number are cleverly reproduced.

Mr. V. Tchertkoff, of the Free Age Press, Maldon, Essex, has just received from Tolstoy the MS. of 'The Slavery of our Times,' the inquiry into the results of modern industrialism on which Tolstoy has been engaged for some months. It will be translated by Mr. Aylmer Maude, and published probably during October.

Messrs. F. V. White & Co. announce John Strange Winter's seventieth book for publication on September 6. The title of the new novel will be 'A Self-made Countess: the Justification of a Husband.' It is dedicated to Mr. Atherley-Jones, Q.C., M.P.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. announce 'A Descriptive and Historical Catalogue of the Collection of Pictures and Sculpture at Apsley House,' in two volumes, from the pen of Evelyn, Duchess of Wellington. The work will be illustrated by fifty-two photo-engravings, specially executed by Braun, Clement & Co., of Paris. Only four hundred and fifty copies will be printed, and of these one hundred are not for sale. Each copy will be numbered.

The September number of the Bookman will contain a fully illustrated biography of Mark Twain, with a plate portrait of the famous American author. Another feature of the issue will be an article by Sir George Douglas, Bart., on the Bi-Centenary of Thomson, the author of 'The Seasons.' The article will be illustrated by a number of photographs of the birthplace &c. of the poet and an authentic portrait.

His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Germany has been graciously pleased to accept a copy of Mr. W. Arnold's translation of the 'Maritime Code of the German Empire,' the new volume of Effingham Wilson's series of translations of the Foreign Maritime Codes.

Messrs. Longmans & Co. have two volumes in preparation that should arouse great interest among the students of psychology. They are entitled 'Human Personality and its Survival of Bodily Health,' and the author is Mr. Frederick W. H. Myers, President of the Society for Psychical Research. Mr. Myers's object is to present in well arranged form the bulk of the evidence, experimental and otherwise, which points to human faculty operating below the surface of ordinary consciousness during life on earth, and to human faculty continuing to operate after the body's decay. Among the subjects treated of are Alternating Personalities, Hysteria, Genius, Sleep, Dreams, Hypnotism, Apparitions, Crystal-gazing, Automatic Writing, Trance, &c.

SOME FRENCH NOVELS OF TO-DAY.

We like to think that the French stories published at the present day are better suited for general reading than were those one was used to see years ago. Too often, in bygone days, attracted by the opening of a new French romance, one was led on to read page after page, when suddenly some scene or passage met the eye which obliged one to close the book in disgust.

Such is certainly not the case with 'Fiancée d'Avril,' par Guy Chantpleure (Paris, Calmann Lévy), in which is pleasantly narrated how Michel Tremor, rich, cultured, travelled, a contributor to a famous review and the prospective author of a learned historical work, but who had made up his mind never to marry because he had once been jilted, becomes the happy husband of his fair American cousin, Suzanne Severn, the charming heroine of a story as entertaining as one could wish for holiday reading.

As the title sufficiently indicates, 'Après le Meurtre,' par Jean Tillault (same publisher), is of a very different character from the story just named. The tragic keynote once struck is maintained throughout, but so harmonious is the telling of the tragedy that the reader wishes to lose no word of it. From the opening picturesque winter night's scene under the frosty star-lit sky at the village railway station, where two principal characters in the story meet just before the murder, until the final act when, by the cruel irony of fate, the vengeance for which the murdered woman's blood cries aloud is consummated at the hand of her daughter, the reader's attention is held enthralled. The author has known how to relieve the prevailing gloom of his theme by some bright home scenes and charming female portraits, notably France Sauban and Tante Monique.

'Le Lys d'Or,' par Louis Letany (same publisher), recalls to mind that strange story of Rosicrucianism and 'the rookery' revelations of London which W. H. Ainsworth began to publish in his magazine on severing his relations with George Cruikshank. Some months later he transferred his editorial duties and his romance to the New Monthly, in which only a few more revelations appeared, for their author abruptly brought his ill-omened production to a lame and impotent conclusion, and did not, until some years later, publish it in book form as 'Auriol; or, the Elixir of Long Life,' with clever and appropriately startling etchings by Phiz.

As 'Auriol' opened with the discovery of the elixir by Dr. Lamb, so the 'Lys d'Or' begins with the discovery by old Count de Bude of a process by which coal becomes crystallised into diamonds. During the performance of the operation under the Count's supervision by his faithful but deaf-and-dumb black servant Saladin, and in the presence of his lovely daughter Claire, six masked figures enter the apartment, the door of which had not been fastened. These mysterious beings are bent on robbery and on the abduction of Claire. Claire, however, is a sort of female Crichton, being a doctor of medicine, an all round scientist, and an accomplished athlete; so she uses a revolver, but is overpowered and secured. The faithful Saladin, however, is equal to the occasion. Looking round, he at once grasps the situation and also one of the assailants, whom he incontinently flings into a bath of molten silver head first—the result being cremation instead of crystallisation. But Saladin is at once placed hors de combat by a stiletto blow, and matters are assuming an ugly aspect for the De Bude household when the bandits betake themselves to plundering an adjoining cellar. After all the band have quitted the room in search of plunder, the old Count, whom they had thought to be dead, raises himself by an expiring effort and, touching a button on the table before him, sets in motion machinery closing the iron door between the laboratory and the cellar, thus imprisoning the masked band as in a tomb.

Readers interested in this sensational opening of 'Le Lys d'Or' must be referred for the further progress of the plot to the story itself and to its sequel, 'Marie-Madeleine' (same publisher), where will be found related what befell Claire de Bude after the death of her father, and how the masked robbers fared during their forced incarceration in the cellar of la Maison grise, and what fate finally befell those worthies. They will find the two volumes are full of sensational incidents and hairbreadth escapes rivalling some of those in the most startling productions of Dumas père, Eugène Sue, or Ponson du Terrail.

'Le Roi Margot,' par Paul Perret (same publisher), is a tale of passion and poison in which a betrayed husband nearly falls a victim to his own misplaced confidence. There is a second story in the same cover called 'Histoire d'un Bouffon,' in which the strange adventures of a parasite are told in a manner recalling the best of Thackeray's short stories.

THE LATE MR. S. CRANE ON 'THE RED BADGE OF COURAGE.'

In an interview with Mr. Stephen Crane which appeared soon after the publication of his best-known book he gave the following account of his beginnings in literature: 'When I was about sixteen I began to write for the New York newspapers, doing correspondence from Asbury Park and other places. Then I began to write special articles and short stories for the Sunday papers and one of the literary syndicates, reading a great deal in the meantime and gradually acquiring a style. I decided that the nearer a writer gets to life the greater he becomes as an artist, and most of my prose writings have been toward the goal partially described by that misunderstood and abused word, realism. Tolstoy is the writer I admire most of all. I've been a free lance during most of the time I have been doing literary work, writing stories and articles about anything under heaven that seemed to possess interest, and selling them wherever I could. It was hopeless work. Of all human lots for a person of sensibility that of an obscure free lance in literature or journalism is, I think, the most discouraging. It was during this period that I wrote "The Red Badge of Courage." It was an effort born of pain—despair, almost; and I believe that this made it a better piece of literature than it otherwise would have been. It seems a pity that art should be a child of pain, and yet I think it is. Of course, we have fine writers who are prosperous and contented, but in my opinion their work would be greater if this were not so. It lacks the sting it would have if written under the spur of a great need.'

Mr. Heinemann, it may be added, has just issued a sixpenny edition of 'The Red Badge of Courage.'

THE AIMS OF THE AMERICAN PUBLISHERS' ASSOCIATION.

The following official declaration of the aims of the American Publishers' Association has been made public by order of the Board of Directors, and appears in the Publishers' Weekly, New York:—

The American Publishers' Association is said by more than one daily paper to have been organised for the purpose of curtailing authors' royalties. It seems necessary, notwithstanding the obvious fallacy to the initiated of such a report, to deny it officially. The conditions of publishing at the present day make it impossible for such a combination for such a purpose to be effected, and the question of authors' royalties has not been, and will not be, considered by the Association.

Other newspapers have stated that the Association intends to antagonise the Department Store interests. Such a course would indeed be fatal to most if not all publishers of popular books at the present day. No publisher of miscellaneous books could afford to neglect this very large and growing channel for the distribution of his products.

The American Publishers' Association was organised for the purpose of remedying certain trade abuses which have told with peculiar hardship upon the retail dealers in books. It is, however, hoped that the proposed working of the Association may also be of benefit to literature and books of the more serious sorts, which have been, owing to the trade abuses which are to be remedied, much neglected by booksellers, to the detriment, not only of the trade itself, but the author and the public as well.

The cutting of prices of the more popular books, resulting from the selling of these books as 'leaders' by the trade, has also brought about the cutting of prices on the more solid classes of books to an extent which prevents the retailers from selling them at a profit, and it has therefore become a rare thing to find a good assortment of the more serious literature at the retail booksellers, to the great inconvenience of the purchasing public. This is, in the opinion of most observers, an entirely unnecessary state of things, as the purchasers of the better classes of books are and always have been willing to pay a fair price for what they need, their great desire being to have afforded them an opportunity of examining these books of the better class, which under the existing state of things do not form any part of the ordinary bookseller's stock in trade.

It is believed that the reasonable regulation of prices, as proposed by the Association on certain classes of books, will result in these works forming a more important part of the stock of the bookstore, to the great convenience of the public desirous of becoming acquainted with the best literature that the publishers have to offer.

The leaders in the Association may be trusted to recognise the fact that the movement must and ought to fail of success unless its rules [illegible] over the present system, and as business men their aim will naturally be to cater for the wants of those interested in literature in the best possible manner, which they believe lies in the direction of [illegible] whether in Department Stores or elsewhere, in every [illegible] where the output of the publishers, not only of novels but of the more serious books as well, may be examined and purchased by a [illegible] and book-loving public such as is to be found in this country in greater proportion to the population, they believe, than elsewhere in the civilised world.

UNITED STATES IMPORTS AND EXPORTS OF BOOKS AND OTHER PRINTED MATTER.

The summary statement of the values of the Imports and Exports of Books and other Printed Matter of the United States for the month ending April 1900, and for the ten months ending the same, compared with the corresponding periods of 1899 (corrected to May 31, 1900), makes, we learn form the New York Publishers' Weekly, the following showing as regards Books, Music, Maps, Engravings, Etchings, Photographs, and other Printed Matter:

IN MEMORIAM.

Professor Henry Sidgwick.

We regret to announce the death of Dr. Henry Sidgwick, until recently Professor of Moral Philosophy at the University of Cambridge, which occurred on Tuesday last at Terling Place, Witham, the residence of his brother-in-law, Lord Rayleigh. Dr. Sidgwick, who was a well known and distinguished writer on ethics and political economy, was born at Skipton, Yorkshire, on May 31, 1838. He was educated at Rugby and Trinity College, Cambridge, became a Fellow of his college in 1859, and held the position of Lecturer of Trinity College from 1859 to 1875, when he was appointed Prælector of Moral and Political Philosophy. In 1881 Dr. Sidgwick was made an honorary Fellow of Trinity College, and was appointed Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in 1883. Professor Sidgwick was the author of 'The Methods of Ethics' (1874), 'Outlines of the History of Ethics,' the 'Principles of Political Economy' (1883), 'Elements of Politics' (1891), 'Practical Ethics' (1898), and of several articles on philosophical and literary subjects. He took a prominent part in the promotion of the Higher Education of Women at Cambridge, especially in the foundation and management of Newnham College. The life of a Cambridge professor, so single-minded and devoted to his work as Dr. Sidgwick, is not usually marked by external incident or event, but few men will be more sincerely lamented by a large circle of friends, to whom his scrupulous fairness and intellectual gifts had endeared him. Indeed, it may be said that his personal influence was even greater than that of his books.

Friedrich Wilhelm Nietzsche.

We are sorry to hear of the death of this well-known author, which took place at Weimar on Saturday last. Nietzsche, who first achieved fame by his 'Philosophy of the Uebermensch,' was born at Roechen, near Lutzen, in 1844, his father being a local clergyman. He devoted himself at first to the study of classical philosophy, studied at the Universities of Bonn and Leipzig, and was allotted a Professorship at Basle in 1869. This position he held for ten years, when he was obliged to relinquish it owing to an affection of the eyes, coupled with brain irritation. For the next few years he travelled a great deal, but was indefatigable as ever in his literary labours. Overwork and the abuse of sleeping draughts brought on in 1889 disease of the brain, from which he never recovered; and for the last ten years he has been practically dead to the public. After the 'Uebermensch,' his 'Thus Spake Zarathustra,' and his 'Jenseits von Gut und Böse' are the most noteworthy of his literary works, and the first in particular is distinguished by great genius and daring originality. During the earlier years of his life Nietzsche was a great admirer of Wagner, whose acquaintance he first made at Basle.

M. Petit de Julleville.

The death is announced, at the age of 59, of M. Petit de Julleville, Professor of French Literary History at the Sorbonne, and author of a 'History of Greece under Roman Rule,' and a 'History of the French Drama and Stage.'

John Morison.

We regret to hear of the death of Mr. John Morison, who at one time was a well-known bookseller in Glasgow, and subsequently entered into partnership with Sir William Collins, having charge of the publishing department until his retirement in 1879. Mr. Morison originally started life as an engineer, but always took a great interest in literature, and his retentive memory enabled him to use his knowledge to the best advantage. He originated the Glasgow Ruskin Society, of which he was the first president, and held a similar office in the Glasgow Young Men's Christian Association, after he had successfully conducted it through the trying period of amalgamation. During his six years' membership of the Glasgow School Board he rendered valuable service to the cause of education. Mr. Morison, who had been in failing health since the autumn of last year, had attained the advanced age of 79, having been born at Fintry, Stirlingshire, on July 13, 1821. His death took place on August 26.

Mary Lee Tregaskis.

We are sorry to learn, almost at the moment of going to press, of the death of Mary Lee Tregaskis, the wife of the well-known second-hand bookseller in High Holborn. Mrs. Tregaskis, who died on Sunday, the 26th of August, was forty-six years of age, and took an active part in her husband's business. She will be very much missed by a wide circle of friends.

CANADIAN AUTHORS.

It is curious to reflect that notwithstanding the vigour of native born colonists the best colonial book we possess was written by an Englishman. We refer to Marcus Clark's novel, 'For the Term of his Natural Life.' Lord Rosebery called it one of the best novels he had ever read, and there is every indication that it has come to stay. But although the colonies do not yet rank high in literary achievement, they are beginning to produce writers of note. Canada, as the premier colony, naturally takes the lead in numbers. We are reminded by a contributor to the American Bookman that in poetry she has Lampman, Fréchette, Scott Carman-Roberts, and in prose Grant Allen, Sarah J. Duncan (Mrs. Cotes), Lily Dougall, William McLennan, Gilbert Parker, E. W. Thomson, and Ernest Seton Thompson.

Mrs. Cotes, whose stories are well known in this country, began her literary work as a newspaper woman, writing descriptive letters from New Orleans during the Cotton Centennial to the Buffalo Courier and the Toronto Globe, and doing special work for the Washington Post, the Globe, and the Montreal Star. She has worked herself up from Newspaper Row to the ranks of the successful novelists of the day, and, as she humorously remarked to a friend, 'I have a family of nine, and they are all self-supporting!' Mr. William McLennan is the author of 'A Span of Life,' which we reviewed favourably on its appearance in this country, and of other works.

Miss Dougall has written seven novels. She has spent the greater part of her life in travel, and now lives at Braid Road, Edinburgh. Her works are 'Beggars All,' 'What Necessity Knows,' 'The Mermaid,' 'The Zeit-Geist,' 'A Question of Faith,' 'A Madonna of a Day,' which appeared originally in Temple Bar and The Mormon Prophet.

Mr. E. W. Thomson has been soldier, journalist, poet, romancer, and editor. He published a volume of short stories, 'Old Man Savarin,' dealing with the 'habitant,' and wrote, in collaboration with M. S. Henry, 'Aucassin and Nicolette.' Mr. Thomson is now the editor of the Youth's Companion.

Mr. Ernest Seton Thompson, whose delightful work is familiar to readers of Scribner's Magazine, though reckoned a Canadian, was born in South Shields. He is the government naturalist of the Province of Manitoba, and has exhibited at the Paris Salon. Although but forty years old, he stands, as the Bookman contributor justly remarks, at the head of his profession, and has spent his life in a faithful and scientific study of his subject. In 'Wild Animals I Have Known' the artist reveals a knowledge of animals which is the result of long study, experiment, and sacrifice. He spends days and nights in the prairies, learning the language of the birds. He went to Texas in the interests of a New York firm which manufactured traps, and proceeded to rid a sheep ranch of the wolves that were destroying the cattle. Mr. Thompson has also written 'The Birds of Manitoba' and 'The Zoölogy of Manitoba,' and has illustrated the second edition of McIlwraith's 'Birds of Ontario.'

Another group of writers who have devoted themselves almost exclusively to Canada and the mother country are Pauline Johnson, Mrs. Francis Harrison, Marjory McMurchy, Marshall Saunders, 'Ralph Connor' (Rev. C. W. Gordon), George Frederick Scott, J. Macdonald Oxley, and Stuart Livingstone. Of these writers Mr. Oxley is the most voluminous. His forte is writing boys' books. Miss Pauline Johnson is the daughter of G. H. M. Johnson, head chief of the Mohawks, and of Emily Howells, a cousin of Mr. W. D. Howells. Miss Johnson's poetry, which has appeared chiefly in the Canadian magazines, is, says her eulogist, instinct with the Indian spirit. Mr. Gilbert Parker, whose career is sympathetically described, was born in Ontario in 1861, and the late Mr. Grant Allen was, as our readers are aware, a native of Kingston. The works of both writers are too well known to be described in these columns.

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Harper & Brothers. — 'Russia against India: the Struggle for Asia,' by Archibald R. Colquhoun. Avowedly written for 'the man in the street' rather than the expert on the Central Asia question, this volume presents no exhaustive study of the subject, but rather a sketch of things as they actually exist, from which the reader may be able to make his own deductions. Commencing with an interesting survey of the events and conditions, dating from many years ago, which have led up to the present state of affairs, the author next gives a description of the country and people of Central Asia, considers British rule in India, and then devotes successive chapters to Afghanistan and Persia, Russia in Central Asia, and the Defence of India. He concludes his work with these words: 'A conflict between East and West for the dominion of the old world is imminent. Slav and Saxon must contend for the supremacy, even for equality, and upon the skill and determination of the two opponents hangs the future of Asia, and not only of Asia but of Europe.' While agreeing with Mr. Colquhoun in many respects, we are inclined to think he takes a gloomy view of the situation. Of the attractive character of his book, however, there can be no doubt, and readers will find much that will lead them to a better comprehension of the Eastern question and the many national interests that are involved. Several maps are supplied with the volume, and these afford additional lucidity to the text. In every way a laudable endeavour has been made to be as clear and concise as possible; and the result is a most interesting practical work.

From Messrs. Hurst & Blackett.—'The World's Slow Stain,' by Harold Vallings. The central figure in this story is a young man whose careless high-spirited nature makes him very attractive. He is 'fast,' reckless, irreverent—all the more romantic vices rolled into one—but still he is exceedingly human, and the properly regulated mind which should steel itself to condemn is moved by a feeling of interest and sympathy instead. Most readers will remember Eugene Wrayburn in 'Our Mutual Friend'; after a fashion FitzMarle reminds us of this character, though he lacks something of his airy grace. Like Eugene, his easy-going nature leads him into trouble, and his trouble is not so immediately concerned with himself as with a woman. Loveday Naucarrow, to conceal her shame, marries a cousin, a young gamekeeper, and from this nearly all the complications of the plot proceed. Animated by fierce jealousy, Naucarrow makes several attempts to kill FitzMarle, and is eventually nearly successful, but the graceless hero is reserved for reformation and more peaceful days, which seems a strange violation of poetic justice. The story is not wanting in some well defined and interesting studies of character, and it possesses a sympathetic charm that will thoroughly enlist the reader's attention.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Letters received by the East India Company from its Servants in the East, transcribed from the "Original Correspondence" Series of the India Office Records,' edited by William Foster, B.A. The documents in Volume IV. of this important work cover the year 1816. It was a period of considerable fluctuation in the Company's prosperity, but on the whole may be said to have shown distinct promise for the future. The principal letters are those of Sir Thomas Roe, Richard Cocks, William Eaton, John Jourdain, Richard Wickham, and John Osterwick, and these throw interesting light on the events of the time, as concerning the Company. In an excellent introduction the editor gives a survey of these events, and thus equips the reader with that special knowledge which is necessary to an accurate understanding of the letters that follow. The volume throughout is distinguished by scholarly care, and for this Mr. Foster is not willing to take all the credit himself, for in connection with the work he mentions Miss E. B. Sainsbury, Dr. Aston, C.M.G., Professor Heaves, Mr. A. N. Wollaston, C.I.E., and others. To the editor and to all who have in any way assisted him a large measure of praise is due.

From George Newnes, Limited. — 'Golden Deeds of the War,' by Alfred Thomas Story. It is a good thing that many of the heroic actions recorded in this volume should be rescued from the columns of the newspaper correspondent and placed in more suitable form for preservation. The author practically takes all the leading movements of the war—the siege and relief of Ladysmith, the battle of Elandslaagte, Colenso, Spion Kop, bombardment of Kimberley, Mafeking, &c.—and relates the brave deeds achieved by individual soldiers in connection with them. Interspersed with the text are a large number of portraits—one hundred and sixty in all—which certainly do not prove the least attractive portion of the work. It is sad to think in looking over Mr. Story's volume how many of these gallant soldiers [illegible] no longer reach them. The majority of the [illegible] he could not speak; [illegible] rtally, wounded, his thought was not for himself, but for the banded nations, the Empire. "Did we win?"'

From Messrs. S. W. Partridge & Co.—'The Boy from Cuba: a School Story,' by Walter Rhoades. Boys as a rule are very conservative in their reading, and indeed the routine of school life scarcely admits of much variety. Mr. Rhoades has pursued the beaten track with excellent discernment. The new pupil turns up at Dr. Borthwick's Academy; he is insulted by one of the other pupils and called 'nigger'; there is a fight; the Cuban comes off victorious; he excels in the school sports; is spectator of an exciting cricket match, and so forth. Take these ingredients, and likewise throw in an attempt to kidnap the hero by fierce Spaniards who have a knowledge of hidden treasure, also a kindly old gentleman who entertains several of the boys to tea and ultimately proves to be a near relative of the boy from Cuba, and you have the main features of Mr. Rhoades' story. If somewhat wanting in originality, it has at least this good point, that it is thoroughly healthy and manly in tone, and the lessons it insensibly teaches are all of the best. The volume is illustrated.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The New Battle of Dorking,' by . The title of this little work will convey to most readers an accurate impression of its contents. It describes with much apparent fidelity an invasion of this country by the French, and the result that attended their efforts. It is satisfactory to find that, after a short and severe struggle, during which excitement ran wild, our Gallic neighbours were utterly defeated, their loss in killed alone, out of a force of 115,000 men, being 15,000. The narrative is interesting, and at the present time should attract considerable attention.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Chestnuts,' by Ernest Wells ('Swears'). Readers who are acquainted with the previous writings of this author will scarcely require to be told of the general character of the present volume. Most of the stories are connected with that far-famed institution, the Pelican Club. It is amusing to learn of the late Sir John Astley ('The Mate') that he was once mistaken by a celebrated palmist for Lord Leighton, and his character drawn accordingly. 'He had the artistic temperament in a high degree; his eye for colour was superb, and his art of drawing not to be equalled.' 'The Mate' scratched his head, and said, 'You may be right, professor, but the only thing I ever drew was a bill, and that "Sam" refused to discount.' The account of the Smith-Kilrain fight, related so frankly, awakens unpleasant memories, and even now one can recollect the keen interests excited by the disappearance of poor Archibald M'Neill, the journalist, whose body was afterwards found in Boulogne Harbour. This pugilistic encounter was in more ways than one a discreditable affair, and we think that Mr. Wells (whose description in its realism does nothing to minimise the brutality of prize-fighting) might well have omitted it from his volume. For the rest, the stories are agreeably piquant and racy, though occasionally they travel over the line of the doubtful. However, Mr. Wells writes for men who have seen something of the broader side of life, and in their approbation he will no doubt find his chief reward.

From Messrs. Simpkin, Marshall, Hamilton, Kent & Co.—'The Mystic Number 7,' by Annabel Gray. It is a pity the authoress of this novel did not devote more consideration to this work, in which case she would no doubt have eliminated many of the errors of construction and style with which it abounds. She has evidently a vivid imagination, great flow of language, and considerable descriptive power, but little judgment. Into the plot of her story she has put as much crude sensational incident as would suffice for half a dozen ordinary novels. The most prominent character is an actress, one of the selfish calculating order, whose beautiful face affords but little indication of her real depraved nature; and the description of her life, with its vulgar luxury and the constant round of her admirers, occupies a large portion of the book. Amongst these admirers is one Sydney Marple, a young man in about the same degree of human degeneracy as herself, whose attentions have already cost him a fortune of twenty thousand pounds and who is now ruined. Of course, as he has no more money, the actress—perhaps a trifle regretfully—dismisses him. Marple is then the cause of his uncle's death, and actually murders his cousin by hurling him over a cliff into the sea. By this means he succeeds to a baronetcy and its accompanying estate. Eventually the actress, Glen Daile, comes to know of the crime he has committed, and her interest being awakened by reason of his renewed fortunes she forces him to marry her under threat of disclosure. Sydney does so, but on the night of their union, when maddened with drink, he takes her up to the same cliff where he murdered his cousin, and, winding his arms about her, plunges over the side into the depths beneath. So they are both killed. This sketch will afford but a faint idea of the exciting incidents of the story generally, but we can assure readers they are likely to be greatly interested if they can completely lay on one side all considerations of probability.

From Mr. T. Fisher Unwin.—'Sir Stamford Raffles: England in the Far East,' by Hugh Edward Edgerton ('Builders of Great Britain' series). It seems to be thought from the preface to this volume that the change of biographer from Mr. H. F. Wilson—who originally undertook the work, but who is now out in South Africa acting as legal adviser to Sir Alfred Milner—to Mr. Edgerton has been to the detriment of the volume. We hardly think there is any necessity for apology. Mr. Edgerton has executed the work of sifting his material with excellent judgment and discretion, the result being a volume that claims the reader's interest from the first. He tells of Sir Stamford Raffles's early life and parentage, how he became assistant secretary to the Prince of Wales Island (Penang) Government, his experiences in this position, and eventual promotion to the higher office of secretary. Even in his younger days Raffles seems to have had a keen eye to the main chance, though his success was undoubtedly due to the unwearying zeal and assiduity with which he devoted himself to his duties. In particular his knowledge of the Malay language served him in good stead. Leaving Penang in 1810 he was appointed by Lord Minto Agent to the Governor-General with the Malay States, a position that offered admirable opportunities for the exercise of his special talents, which subsequently raised him, at the age of thirty, to the Governorship of Java. To the interests of this island Raffles now devoted his earnest attention, and it is possible, as Mr. Edgerton points out, that 'the first years of his government of Java were the happiest of Raffles's public life.' To this portion of his subject our author has devoted three chapters—certainly not the least interesting—of his work. Lightly passing over Raffles's visit to England in 1816, he next records his return to the Far East as Lieutenant-Governor of Bencoolen. Here he remained for six years, and the remainder of the book is principally taken up with an account of his administration; the visits be paid on political missions to Calcutta, Singapore, Acheen, &c., and the tenour of his home life. Returning to this country in 1824, Sir Stamford Raffles died two years later from an apoplectic seizure at the comparatively early age of forty-five. To many readers it will come as news that he was the original founder of the Zoological Society. In the words of Mr. Edgerton, his character was 'as great morally and intellectually as it was politically.' The volume is a worthy record of a well-spent, energetic life. And yet it is impossible to lay it down without something of regret. Raffles, with all his good qualities, was not exactly perfect.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Agatha Webb,' by Anna Katherine Green (Mrs. Charles Rohlfs). Another story of crime, or rather in this case apparent crime, and its subsequent unravelment by a number of investigators, amateur and professional. The incidents of the plot are thrilling enough, but they have been loosely jointed together. Mrs. Rohlfs has done far better work than this. Somehow writers of sensational fiction at the present day seem to think that any story, no matter how carelessly constructed, will go down with the public so long as it teems with exciting episode. This is a mistake; a certain amount of probability is required, and the imagination-run-riot story achieves little genuine success. A really good sensational plot requires as much care and attention in its construction as the society novel, though it deals with broad effects rather than character portraiture. All the puppets in Mrs. Rohlf's story awaken little interest in themselves; the most prominent are of the thoroughly melodramatic type, and strike their attitudes in the most approved melodramatic fashion. The wicked woman of the plot, for instance, is beautiful to an extreme. She exercises her baleful influence over the hero after the customary method of the 'siren'; and her low scornful laugh (without which no self-respecting wicked woman would ever present herself in the pages of sensational fiction) is heard at frequent intervals throughout the story. We candidly confess we are disappointed in 'Agatha Webb,' for though it may please the less discriminating of readers it shows a distinct falling-off from the author's previous works.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth when not otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

The Times
HISTORY OF THE WAR IN SOUTH AFRICA
1899—1900

Edited by L. S. AMERY

Fellow of All Souls'.

This important Work is expected to form five royal 8vo. volumes, each of about 320 pp.

The size of paper and type will be the same and the binding will be similar to those of Sir Herbert Maxwell's 'Life of the Duke of Wellington.' The paper will be specially light for handling, and the type entirely new.

WITH MANY PHOTOGRAVURE AND OTHER PORTRAITS, MAPS, AND BATTLE PLANS.

SPECIAL OFFER TO SUBSCRIBERS BEFORE PUBLICATION.

For a limited period orders will be accepted for the complete set of Five Volumes at £2. 12*s*. 6*d*. net the set.

Such orders must be sent in at once with remittance for £2. 12*s*. 6*d*. Each Subscriber will receive a numbered receipt from 'THE TIMES,' and the Work will be delivered to Subscribers in their numerical order.

The price will be raised to not less than £3. 2*s*. 6*d*. net the set when the Subscription List is closed.

N.B.—It is possible, though not probable, that a Sixth Volume may become necessary. In this case no extra charge will be made for the Volume to Subscribers.

Illustrations.—The Work will be fully illustrated with Photogravure and other Portraits of prominent Military and Civil Personages connected with the War, also with the latest Maps and Battle Plans, and a specially prepared general Map of South Africa.

It is intended that the Work shall be published as early in the autumn as the circumstances of the War will allow.

 The number of orders that have already come in are sufficient to show that there will be a very large demand for this Work, and if the mails from South Africa and other Colonies bring in orders to the extent anticipated, it may become necessary very suddenly to close the subscription List; and in any case the trade, which will want to be supplied early, may be compelled to wait until the numerous prior orders are executed. Particulars respecting Trade Terms should be applied for at once by all Booksellers who have not yet received them. Prospectus and Showbill can be had.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

REGULATIONS.

1. BOOKS IN PRINT ARE NOT ADVERTISED FOR, but can only appear in the ordinary Column Advertisements and at the usual scale rate. Every care is taken to prevent this rule from being infringed; but we cannot hold ourselves in any way responsible for occasional oversights. Subscribers are requested to make careful inquiry at the Publishers' before sending their lists for these Columns.
2. Only one title will be inserted in each line.
3. Collective advertisements are not admissible, except in the case of very old subjects, where it may naturally be supposed the Advertisers have a difficulty in obtaining the titles.
4. All lists should be sent to the Office, addressed to the 'Manager of the Publishers' Circular,' as early in the week as possible, and in no case later than Wednesday morning. Advertisements received too late for one issue (i.e., on Thursday) are not inserted in the next unless express instructions to this effect are given. This is to avoid any misunderstanding arising from charging for extra lines.
5. Every Annual Subscriber has the privilege of a four-line Advertisement free each week in these columns and can have extra lines at 3d. per line prepaid. For Non-Subscribers a uniform rate of 3d. per line prepaid is charged, the name and address being counted as one line.
6. The Proprietors reserve to themselves the right of refusing any Advertisement.

THE HYMNAL COMPANION

TO THE BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER

Edited by the Right Rev. E. H. BICKERSTETH, D.D., Lord Bishop of Exeter.

NEW REVISED AND ENLARGED EDITION

The present Edition contains 600 Hymns, of which only 466 appeared in the last Edition—84 Hymns of that Edition which contained 550 having now been omitted, whilst 134 New Hymns have been added; and it is hoped that the loss of those omitted, some of which time has proved were rarely sung, will be far more than compensated by the gain of those introduced.

The new Musical Edition has been edited by CHARLES VINCENT, Mus.D. Oxon., Organist of Christ Church, Hampstead, and by D. J. WOOD, Mus.B. Oxon., Organist of Exeter Cathedral, with the counsel and assistance, throughout their laborious work, of Sir JOHN STAINER, M.A., Mus.D., Professor of Music in the University of Oxford.

Grants are made in special cases on the introduction of the 'Hymnal Companion' into poor parishes.

The following refers solely to the 1890 EDITION, which is quite distinct from the old book and cannot be used with it. The Original Editions are kept in print.

'The book contains a very great deal that is not only new but excellent in idea and in detail. . . . The tendency of the book is to make the youthful student self-reliant and to increase his mental capacity for figures. . . . It is one of the most complete school arithmetics in existence.'—School Board Chronicle, July 27, 1899.

THE FOURTH EDITION OF

JACKSON'S PRACTICAL ARITHMETIC

Enlarged by the addition of over ONE THOUSAND NEW QUESTIONS (with Answers).

Fcp. 8vo. cloth, 460 pp. price 4s.

In issuing a Fourth Edition of this valuable work, the Publishers would direct the attention of teachers not only to the many unique features which render it so superior as a text-book for Middle and Upper Forms, Candidates for Examinations, and Students in Training, but to the addition and inclusion of over One Thousand new questions from Oxford and Cambridge Papers and other sources, which brings the grand total to upwards of EIGHT THOUSAND EXAMPLES, and to the fact that the work 'contains a great deal that they may search all existing text-books for in vain.'

'I have used your Arithmetic in the upper divisions of this school for some years, and can with confidence speak of its great value as a class-book. It quite fulfils all that you state concerning it.'—Isabella Mulvany, B.A., Headmistress, Alexandra School, Dublin.

'In his "Practical Arithmetic" Mr. Jackson displays an originality and power which raise the treatment of this subject quite out of the ordinary dull routine into an atmosphere of intense intellectual activity. No book on this subject so suggestive for the teacher has appeared in our time.'—David Ross, M.A., B.Sc., LL.D., Principal, Church of Scotland Training College, Glasgow.

H.M. INSPECTORS AND TEACHERS:

'I will recommend it as superior to any text-book at present in use.'
'It has no rival.'
'I have learned much from it that I never saw before.'
'The section on fractional arithmetic surpasses anything hitherto produced.'
'We have had no failure in public examinations since using your book.'

'We have been unable to find any single one of the new methods which we do not conscientiously prefer to the old ones generally in vogue.' Educational Times.
'Decidedly superior in most respects to books hitherto in use.'—Morning Post.
'It is one of the clearest, completest, and most concise books of arithmetic produced within recent years.'—Northern Whig.
'This is one of the very best arithmetic books we have seen.'—Aberdeen Journal.

☞ IMPORTANT

All who are interested in books, either as readers, authors, purchasers, or vendors, would do well to subscribe to the

Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record

ESTABLISHED 1837

Among the numerous attractions of its columns are the following:—

Literary articles (including leader on some topic of the moment), announcements of important forthcoming volumes, notes on current events, reviews (often illustrated), correspondence, &c. An exceedingly valuable feature of the paper is the list of the most complete list to be found anywhere, giving the full title, size, price, and publisher, with an index of subjects and name of book and author in one alphabet. Also in every number some Hundreds of Out-of-Print Books are advertised for, thus affording readers an exceptional opportunity either of disposing of their own scarce volumes or purchasing others that they may be in need of; and it is especially to be noted that Annual Subscribers have the privilege of a four-line advertisement free each week in this column. They also receive a gratis copy of the large special Christmas Number—a handsome quarto volume containing over 250 illustrations.

As an advertising medium in connection with books, the Publishers' Circular and Booksellers' Record stands unrivalled.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTION.

The Publishers' Circular can be had by sending Postal Order or Stamps to Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co., Limited, the Proprietors, St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, London, to whom all money payments should be made.

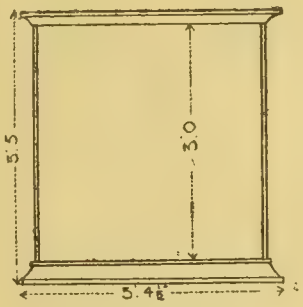
CHIVERS' BOOK ISSUE INDICATOR

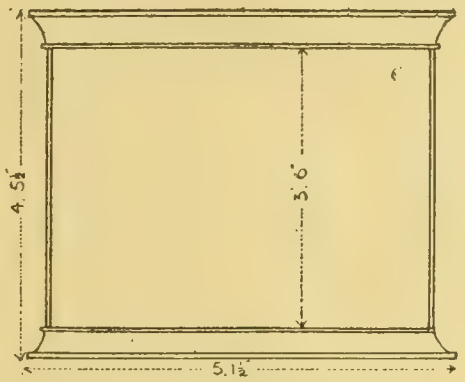
AND CHARGING SYSTEM.

That this Indicator is steadily gaining ground is shown by the fact that it has been adopted by the following Public Libraries:

BRADFORD.
BROMSGROVE.
CAMPBELTOWN, N.B.
CARLISLE.
DEWSBURY.
DERBY.
GRIMSBY.
HYDE.
JOHANNESBURG, S.A.
LANCASTER.



The Chivers' Indicator, 4,000 numbers.



The other Indicator, 4,000 numbers.

LUTON.
LYDNEY INSTITUTE.
NEATH.
OLDHAM E.C.S.L.
PERTH.
RAWMARSH.
REDDITCH.
SOUTHPORT.
ST. HELEN'S (2).
SYDNEY, N.S.W.
TYNEMOUTH.
WIGAN.
WORKINGTON.
WALLASEY.

For New Libraries adopting an Indicator this is undoubtedly the best. It is not claimed on its behalf that it is of the widest adoption, for it is comparatively new. The advantages over the devices hitherto most frequently used are:

1. That it is much smaller.
2. The figures are much clearer.
3. Declares overdues automatically.
4. Lends itself more readily to statistical purposes.
5. Is quicker in operation.
6. Is cheaper and costs less to maintain.
7. Keeps clean and bright.
8. It does everything other Indicators do, and supplements them where they have proved weak.
9. Apart from its own Charging System, it is a device which shows in smallest space books IN and OUT. This Indicator is alone in adapting itself to any system of book-keeping or charging which the Librarian has in use and desires to retain.

FULL PARTICULARS, DIAGRAMS, AND ILLUSTRATIONS WILL BE SENT ON APPLICATION.

CEDRIC CHIVERS, PORTWAY, BATH, ENGLAND.

WORKS ON CHEMISTRY

By R. L. TAYLOR, F.I.C., F.C.S.

Teacher of Chemistry and Physics in the Central Higher Grade School, Manchester, and Headmaster of the Central Evening School of Science and Art, Manchester.

CHEMISTRY FOR BEGINNERS.

Adapted for the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations in Organic Chemistry. Fifth Edition, enlarged. Illustrated. With 200 Questions and Problems. Crown 8vo. 2*s.* 6*d.* APPENDIX—EXERCISES IN PRACTICAL CHEMISTRY: MOSTLY QUANTITATIVE. Crown 8vo. 24 pp., paper covers, 6*d.*

'Covers the whole ground of the Elementary Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examination, and forms generally an excellent introduction to the study of Chemistry, the explanations of chemical phenomena being unusually full.' SCHOOL BOARD CHRONICLE.

THE STUDENT'S CHEMISTRY.

Adapted for the Advanced Stage of the Science and Art Department's Examinations, the Oxford and Cambridge Local Examinations, the London University Examinations, &c. With over 600 Questions and Problems, Tables and Spectra, &c. Fully Illustrated. Crown 8vo. 360 pages, 5*s.* With KEY to Problems, 6*s.* 6*d.*

'Mr. Taylor has hit the mark well in his attempt to produce a text-book of chemistry for students who wish to reach the level of the advanced stage of the Science and Art Department. While he has been careful not to include too much mere detail, he has not thereby rendered his manual incomplete or insufficient. He has endeavoured to make his descriptions of [illegible] as full and exact as practicable up to date. The concluding chapters set forth the principal theories in such a way as to enable the student to grasp their import readily.'
SCHOOLMASTER.

CHEMICAL PROBLEMS WITH SOLUTIONS.

Being the Key to the Problems in 'Chemistry for Beginners' and 'The Student's Chemistry.' By R. L. TAYLOR and S. PARRISH, A.R.C.S. (London), Teacher of Chemistry in the Central Higher Grade School, Leeds. Crown 8vo. cloth, 2*s.* 6*d.*

'This is the complement of Mr. Taylor's "Student's Chemistry." Full and intelligible explanations of the questions in the [illegible] work are given.' SCHOOLMASTER.

ANALYSIS TABLES FOR CHEMICAL STUDENTS.

By JOHN MILLS, F.R.A.S.

ALTERNATIVE ELEMENTARY CHEMISTRY.

Being a Course of Lessons adapted to the requirements of the New Syllabus of Chemistry recently instituted by the Science and Art Department. With a Preface by Professor THORPE, F.R.S. Illustrated with 65 Drawings. Crown 8vo. 104 pages, cloth, 1*s.* 6*d.*

'It is a practical and businesslike manual, clear in its description, and illustrated by a number of serviceable diagrams.'—SCOTSMAN.

CHEMISTRY FOR STUDENTS.

A Text-Book for the Elementary Course, Science and Art Department. With over 300 Illustrations. Crown 8vo. cloth, 3*s.* 6*d.*

ANSWERS TO EXAMINATION QUESTIONS.

The Publishers' Circular

St. Dunstan's House, E.C.

September 7, 1900.

There are always a large number of people floundering about in the world who are sadly in need of a guide. They helplessly drift about the by-paths of life, utterly lost for want of that practical instinct which will enable them to take advantage of their opportunities. Occasionally some well-intentioned individual, not altogether uninfluenced by personal motives, comes forward with words of kindly advice; and so we have those curious little manuals that testify to the dejected ones how easy it is to live on a shilling a day, to dress like a nobleman on £10 a year, to make a small fortune out of a poultry yard, and so forth. To these has now to be added, 'How to Write for the Magazines,' by '£600 a year from it' (Grant Richards). Now be it noted that the desire to appear in 'guid black print' is one of the strongest and commonest of human cravings. Dickens once said that the most prevalent mania with which he was acquainted was for a pass to the theatre; and he instanced the case of a sailor who, on being restored to consciousness after as near an acquaintance with death as a man could very well have without actually dying, was asked what he would most like to have, when he unhesitatingly replied: 'A ticket for the play.' But Dickens had a particularly soft side for the theatre himself, and was possibly at the time speaking to an assemblage of histrions, so that something may be allowed for exaggeration. Generally speaking, the desire to appear in print may be considered the most deeply rooted of human passions. Thus the interest to most people of this latest manual in the 'How to' series. 'How to Write for the Magazines'—what an entrancing sound the very title must have for the many people who for years past have been vainly endeavouring to raise themselves to the dignity of authorship; how it seems to convey a realisation of their dearest hopes! And then £600 a year! Of course it is not exactly stated that the reader can make this sum; but the writer has done so, and if the writer why not the reader? The inference at least is in favour of similar results being achieved, or why mention the sum at all?

There will probably be a slight feeling of disappointment on first opening the book to find that the magazines principally alluded to are Answers, Tit-Bits, Pearson's, and the like. The ambitions of the tiro had probably soared far above these. But he is assured that the papers named pay far better than many of their much higher priced contemporaries, and it is pointed out that though a guinea or a guinea and a half does not appear much in itself, yet when frequently multiplied by work which does not involve any great labour or mental strain the remuneration is not to be scoffed at. If the beginner is to make anything like a decent livelihood out of authorship, it is very necessary that he should cultivate the business capacity, and this will tell him that the smaller opportunities should never be ignored. Our mentor very frankly states the amounts he (or more probably she) made when exercising the pen simply as a hobby. These were: First year, £11. 10*s.*; second year, £18. 16*s.*; third year, £25. 9*s.* On taking to the occupation in thorough earnest, and writing every day upon a definite plan and with a definite aim, the sum rose in the first year to £128. 15*s.* 6*d.*; the second year it was £217; the third year it worked out at £320. 16*s.*; and in the succeeding twelve months it was as much as £550. Since then it has never been less than £650 to £700 a year, entirely obtained by writing for the weeklies and magazines.

But how is it done? that is the point. Well, firstly, you must have merit. Without that, of course, it is useless to try at all. Then you must carefully train your observation to the discovery of likely 'copy.' Wherever you are you must always be on the alert for suggestions. (A holiday drive to some historical places of interest once yielded the author, in one way and another, no less than £35.) You must also be capable of putting a new face on old material; of being original and striking; and you must be able to discriminate between what is likely to attract and what is already overdone and played out. A thorough grasp of your subject is likewise a necessity, and you must be competent to write quickly and at short notice. Any facts you may quote should be carefully verified. Given these few trifling attributes, and there is no reason why the literary aspirant should not triumphantly ascend the road to success, especially with the help of the many suggestions so plentifully scattered throughout the pages of this little manual. Yet somehow we fancy the anxious novice will not find the consolation he has derived from its perusal so great as he anticipated. Theory is one thing and practice is another, and there is so much in an 'if.' We may assure him on our own authority that it is impossible in any calling to avoid the preliminary drudgery — the drudgery, in short, that is often the true secret of success.

NOTES AND ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The 'South Sea Sketches' that Stevenson wrote during his voyage in the yacht Casco and the schooner Equator are to be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus in volume form under the title 'In the South Seas: an Account of Persons and Observations in the Marquesas, Paumotus, and Gilbert Islands.'

Messrs. Methuen & Co. will shortly publish a book on 'The Siege of Mafeking,' by Mr. Angus Hamilton, the well-known correspondent of the Times. Part II. of their 'History of the Boer War,' to be issued immediately, contains a full and detailed account of the attack on Spion Kop, and is illustrated with numerous photographs, drawings, and plans.

Mr. J. M. Barrie's story, 'Tommy and Grizel,' which has been running serially in Scribner's Magazine, is to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. this autumn in book form. It presents many of the author's most charming characteristics, and as a separate volume should be certain, we think, of a large circulation.

In November Messrs. Nisbet & Co. will publish a new work, by Walter Walsh, on 'The Romeward Movement in the Church of England.' It will practically constitute a sequel to the author's previous volume detailing the secret history of the Oxford Movement, since it fully describes the results of that movement in the Church of England.

Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons have in preparation a series of 'Handbooks to Continental Churches' uniform with their English 'Cathedral Series.' The first volumes, on 'Chartres,' by Mr. H. J. L. J. Massé, and 'Rouen,' by the Rev. T. Perkins, will be published very shortly, and others are in preparation. The volumes will deal not only with the cathedrals, but also with the other important churches in each town.

Mr. Frederick Courtney Selous's new work on 'Sport and Travel, East and West,' will be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. on October 1. It will contain eighteen plates and thirty-five illustrations in the text. About the same date they will also issue 'The Story of the Life of Dr. Pusey,' by the author of 'Charles Lowder.' This life is not an abridgment of Dr. Liddon's work, but an entirely independent memoir.

The work on shooting, by Mr. Charles E. Walker, which Messrs. A. Constable & Co. are to publish, should be welcome to all sportsmen. The endeavour of the author is to be as practical as possible, and the major portion of his treatise is devoted to the all important topics of guns and ammunition, what to look for and what to avoid in choosing and managing a small shooting property, sporting rights, leases, keepers, poachers of all kinds—human, four-footed, and winged—farming tenants, &c. Every species of shooting claims the author's attention—pheasant, partridge, grouse, rabbit, woodcock, snipe, wild fowl, &c. The book will have numerous illustrations and diagrams.

Messrs. R. A. Everett & Co. announce a new work, in two volumes on the subject of the management and breeding of horses. It is entitled 'The Stable Key; or, Stud and Stable Studies,' and the author is Mr. W. A. Kerr, V.C., at one time adjutant of the Southern Mahratta Horse, and already favourably known to readers by one or two books on the subject of riding. His aim in the present instance is to supply the busy horse owner with such practical information as shall enable him to cope with the many difficulties that arise in the management of his stock, and to dispense, except in the more serious cases, with the aid of the veterinary surgeon. Volume I. treats of the general subject of horses, while in the second volume Mr. Kerr devotes himself to the important industry of breeding. The work will be profusely illustrated with reproductions from photographs and original drawings, and printed on paper specially manufactured. Only a limited edition is to be issued.

The third edition, revised and enlarged, of 'The Primitive Saints and the See of Rome,' by F. W. Puller, of the Society S. John the Evangelist, Cowley, which Messrs. Longmans & Co. are to issue at the beginning of next month, has been so remodelled and enlarged as almost to constitute a new work. It contains more than double the amount of matter that appeared in the first edition published in 1893, a considerable portion of the old letterpress having been re-written. In this new edition special notice has also been taken of all the most important arguments brought forward by the late Dr. John Rivington in his 'Primitive Church and the See of Peter.' The volume contains an introduction by the Bishop of Lincoln.

Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner & Co. are to publish the essay on 'England under Protector Somerset,' with which Mr. A. W. Pollard recently carried off the Arnold Prize at Oxford, open to Graduates. This is the second time Mr. Pollard has been successful in university contests of this description, for some years ago he won the Marquis of Lothian's prize for an historical essay. Mr. Pollard was one of the assistant editors of the 'Dictionary of National Biography.'

'Malaria according to the New Researches,' a scientific work of much value which Messrs. Longmans & Co. will publish about the end of the month, is from the pen of Professor Angelo Celli, director of the Institute of Hygiene, University of Rome. It has been translated from the second Italian edition by John Joseph Eyre, M.R.C.P. and L.R.C.S. Ireland. Dr. Patrick Manson, Medical Adviser to the Colonial Office, has contributed an introduction.

Mr. Fortescue, of the British Museum, has supplied a contemporary with some interesting information relative to the catalogues of that institution. The General Catalogue is now completed, it appears, to the end of 1899, and the usual Accession Catalogues are regularly prepared and absorbed in the General Catalogue, which at present consists of four hundred volumes and seventy additional supplements. The cost of this catalogue has been roughly estimated at £40,000, or £2,000 a year spread over a period of twenty years, and copies have been supplied to most of the leading libraries in Europe at a cost of £84. Now that the staff employed on the General Catalogue is free to take up other work, it has been decided to start a Subject Index, which Mr. Fortescue hopes will be completed within ten years.

Under the title of 'The Third Salisbury Administration, 1895–1900,' Messrs. Vacher & Co. will shortly publish a history of the present Government, by Mr. H. Whates. The volume will be divided into seven books, preceded by an Introduction descriptive of the circumstances of the last General Election, and closed by a chapter giving a Summary and Conclusions. Several maps, and appendices containing the text of all important diplomatic documents, will be a feature of the work.

Few men can have seen more of Turf life than John Osborne, the erstwhile jockey and now trainer. He is a native, too, of the county of broad acres, whose sons are renowned for their love of horses and native shrewdness. It is to be hoped that the latter quality will not prevent the 'Pusher,' as he was playfully termed when actively exercising the profession of jockey, from giving readers his full confidence in the volume of reminiscences that Messrs. Sands & Co. are to publish. Of course we shall hear all about Lord Clifden's St. Leger, the triumphs gained in the dark blue and silver braid of Mr. 'Johnstone,' the victories of the 'fighting parson,' Mr. Launde, and other interesting features connected with the northern stables. There are one or two mysteries also we hope, rather than expect, 'honest John' will clear up. The material of the volume has been arranged by Mr. J. B. Ratcliffe, and it will be illustrated by a number of portraits suggested by the text.

Juvenile readers have come to expect a book by Jules Verne from Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. every autumn, and sorely would the youngsters be disappointed if it did not make its appearance. The story this year will be entitled 'The Will of an Eccentric.' The gentleman in question is greatly addicted to the game of 'Jean de l'Oie,' and on dying he leaves his enormous wealth to be contended for by seven persons. They are to travel throughout America, following the same rules that obtain in the game; and the strange experiences and adventures they meet with form the substance of the story.

The death is announced from India of Mr. Grattan Geary, editor and proprietor of the Bombay Gazette. Mr. Geary had lived in India many years, and previous to acquiring the Bombay Gazette was editor of the Times of India. He was the author of a work entitled 'Through Asiatic Turkey: a Narrative of a Journey from Bombay to the Bosphorus,' which was published in London in 1878. In this book he described in a very interesting manner his journey on horseback through Asiatic Turkey.

Messrs. Geo. Bell & Sons will publish immediately an illustrated volume on 'Fra Angelico and his Art,' by Mr. Langton Douglas, who has recently been appointed Professor of Modern History in the University of Adelaide. They also announce a new and cheaper edition for immediate publication of their 'Illustrated Chronicle' of Lord Leighton. It will contain eighty reproductions from Leighton's pictures, and a chapter has been added on Leighton's House by Mr. Pepys Cockerell.

Mr. Andrew Lang's book for Christmas 1900, to be published by Messrs. Longmans & Co. in October, will be called 'The Grey Fairy Book.' It will contain sixty-five illustrations by H. J. Ford, who, we believe, has illustrated most of the author's Christmas collections of fairy tales.

His Imperial Majesty the Emperor of Russia has been graciously pleased to accept copies of the Rev. Dr. Tien's educational works in Arabic, Turkish, and Greek, published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. and also copies of the translations of the English Prayer Book into Arabic, Turkish, and Russian, with other books, from the Christian Knowledge Society.

It must be very pleasurable to be regarded as the 'Russian Mark Twain.' Such is the reputation, according to Messrs. Greening & Co., that Nicholas A. Leyken has obtained. The firm in question will publish one of his books—or rather, we presume, a translation—this autumn. It is entitled 'Where the Oranges Grow.' They have also in hand two novels by new authors; 'The Prettiness of Fools,' by Mr. Edgar Hewitt, and 'The Tragedy of a Pedigree,' by Mr. Hugo Ames.

Mr. Baring-Gould's new story, 'In the Roar of the Sea,' which Messrs. Methuen & Co. have just published in their 'Sixpenny Library,' is thoroughly exciting without being irrational, and the author once again exhibits his skill of construction and character portraiture. There are few readers, we imagine, who, given a start, will not pursue with breathless interest the fortunes of Judith Trevisa to the end, or who will not heartily hurl anathemas at the heads of 'cruel' Coppinger and the unnatural aunt for their persecution of the poor girl. The scene is laid in Cornwall.

Mr. Henry Kimpton has published an eighth edition of Dr. Thomas Linn's 'Health Resorts of Europe,' a medical guide to the mineral springs, climatic, mountain and seaside health resorts, milk, whey, grape, earth, mud, sand, and air cures of Europe. It is a useful little work which, within a small compass, affords some valuable health suggestions.

Messrs. Digby, Long & Co. will publish during the autumn a new novel by Mr. J. McLaren Cobban, entitled 'The Golden Tooth.' They have also in the press a cheap edition of Mr. F. W. Robinson's story 'A Bridge of Glass,' and works of fiction by Miss May Crommelin, Mr. H. A. Spurr, and Mr. J. E. Patterson.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. will have ready next week a new story for girls by Jessie Mansergh (Mrs. G. de Horne Vaizey), entitled 'Sisters Three.' They will also publish at the same time Mrs. Stuart Robson's new book, 'A Girl without Ambition.'

Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have just issued new editions of their excellent guides to 'Oban, Fort William, and the Western Highlands,' and 'Lynton, Lynmouth, and North-East Devon.' Both of these little books contain a perfect mine of interesting and valuable information, are clearly and concisely written, and are abundantly supplied with illustrations, maps, tables, and everything that can be of service to the traveller.

All boys will be glad to hear of the early publication of two new stories of adventure by Mr. Edward S. Ellis. The first is entitled 'Iron Heart: War Chief of the Iroquois,' and it relates the story of a thrilling journey down the Catsuga by three brothers and a scout; how they crept through the Red Indian lines; how they were besieged by the great chief Iron Heart, the leader of the Six Nations; and the astonishing way in which the adventures ended. The second is 'Red Jacket: the Last of Senecas,' an historical romance dealing with the days of the American Revolution. The central figure is that of a boy who, animated by intense patriotism, travelled many miles through a hostile country and joined General Sullivan's army as a scout. Both books will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. next week.

THE NOVELS OF THE LATE MR. GRANT ALLEN.

To the summer number of the Argosy Mr. Andrew Lang contributes an interesting paper on the late Mr. Grant Allen, taking as a foundation for his remarks the recently published biography by Mr. Clodd. After some reference to Mr. Allen's earlier life and career at Oxford, his four years' Professorship of Mental and Moral Philosophy in Jamaica, and subsequent publication of that great failure (so far as financial success was concerned), 'Physiological Æsthetics,' Mr. Lang points out that he took to popular science, 'by which a tiny income may be made by an extremely clever man in this educated age. "Carving a Cocoa-nut," "Dissecting a Daisy"—such essays are absolutely unremunerative, and pay, I conceive, about as well as history—certainly better than physiological æsthetics or a work "On the Colour Sense," which in twelve years produced £30. . . . Mr. Darwin, Mr. Spencer, Mr. Wallace applauded; but a man cannot live on applause, and only professors can live by science. The public does not care "whether petals are in all cases transformed stamens" or not, and I confess to sharing this hideous indifference.'

So Mr. Allen was forced into journalism and fiction. In 1880 he wrote a scientific ghost story in Belgravia.

Now Mr. Lang is something of an authority on ghostly visitants, as witness his 'Book of Dreams and Ghosts,' with other contributions to the subject, and he naturally fixes on this event for a few words of trenchant criticism. 'No man knew less than he (Grant Allen) of the science of ghosts, unless Mr. Clodd is yet more deficient in this branch of research. He tried to show that you could not weigh a ghost; of course he might as well say that you cannot weigh your view of a landscape. Impressions of sense, true or false, are imponderable. Then you cannot "apply any test of credibility to an apparition's statements." But each of us is only an apparition to everyone else, and you can check the statements of an apparition as you can those of a fellow-citizen. He tells you something you do not know; to take a case familiar to me, that the drains are out of order. Then you test the statement in the usual way exactly as if the apparition was in flesh and blood, as we call certain phenomena. However, Mr. Allen "displayed scientific truth" (as he thought) in a story, and was asked to write more stories, and his tales were excellent, and he could live on the exercise of his fancy.'

Mr. Lang's remarks, however, reach their highest point of interest when he comes to speak of 'The Woman Who Did.' 'One had always thought it a highly successful novel,' he writes, 'but Mr. Allen deemed that it injured him as a novelist. He wrote it "wholly and solely to satisfy my own taste and conscience." There is no arguing about consciences, but taste is a more definite thing, and Mr. Allen's taste must have been unusual. It is all very well to proclaim "the gospel of freedom between man and woman, as the basis of a higher morality." But on such a basis it will take a long time to build a higher morality, and in the meanwhile the aunts have to look after the children. The gospel is one-sided. Lovely woman is united with a Moor, or a boor, and finds somebody else whom she likes better. Her native purity makes it her duty to go off with somebody, and so on ad infinitum. This may be a higher morality than the present, or Christian notion, that honour bids lovely woman to curb her passion, cut short her love in the bud, and remain loyal to Number 1. She need never have married him; having married him, let her make the best of him. But what is fair for woman is not fair for man. Mr. Allen never wrote a novel on the following lines. A (male) marries B, a pretty stupid lass. In a year or two A finds B out; tires of her, meets C. A high sense of morality urges A to desert B (who has grown stout, or is in bad health), and to elope with C. What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. The higher morality ought to be applied all round. But Mr. Allen never, for some reason, wrote a novel to preach this part of the new creed. The fact is that, even if custom sanctioned the system of non-marriage, a gentleman would not take advantage of custom; would not break the heart of a woman who had given to him her love and her youth. Of course the thing is done, but he who does it is—as Mr. Stevenson's hero says to the missionary. As a rule, only one of the partners, at a given moment, wants to break away. By Mr. Allen's own ethics, self-sacrifice is a duty, so A must cling to B, or B to A, marriage law or no marriage law. It is the business of human beings to keep their passions in hand. Law slowly developed, and, after trying every conceivable system, has evolved monogamy wherever men have been civilised. As an evolutionist Mr. Allen ought to have recognised these facts. Not that monogamy makes everybody moral or happy. This earth is not yet the kingdom of heaven, where there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage. We cannot base a higher morality on free love; we must have a higher morality first, and improve monogamy by mastering the passions. The conviction of a mission is fatal to the gift of humour,' Mr. Clodd says. It was fatal in Mr. Allen's case, for his two moral novels were, in plain language, humourless absurdities, bad stories, and not good pamphlets. 'The second fell so flat that Mr. Traill's parody must have been little read.'

Mr. Lang seems surprised that anyone should have been foolish enough to infer from Mr. Allen's books that he was a libertine; but, considering the way other authors have been accused of the opinions placed in the mouths of their characters, we do not see much to wonder at. The great mass of novel readers are not very discriminating.

SOME SEPTEMBER MAGAZINES.

One of the most interesting articles in Longman's Magazine is by Mr. H. G. Hutchinson on 'Dreams.' We should like to take an extract from this paper, but unfortunately space will only permit of our making the briefest reference to any contribution. We would, however, recommend those who are interested in the subject to read the article for themselves. Mr. S. G. Tallentyre makes of 'Mademoiselle de Lespinasse' an interesting study, and no doubt many people, like ourselves, will be surprised to find how distinguished a woman she was. The other contents of Longman's is mostly fiction, always excepting 'At the Sign of the Ship,' where Andrew Lang discourses with insight and erudition on a variety of subjects, mostly literary.

We do not remember to have found Cornhill in so pleasantly discursive a mood for many months back. There are twelve articles, stories, and poems in all, not counting the serial by Henry Seton Merriman, who is narrating that skilfully constructed piece of work with an ability not surpassed by any of his previous works, or 'The Conferences on Books and Men,' by Urbanus Sylvan. Among the contributors are Mrs. Margaret L. Woods, Frank T. Bullen, F. G. Aflalo, M. E. Francis, and other well-known writers. 'Feasts in Fiction,' by W. E. Garrett Fisher, is a fairly long article, but of course it cannot be expected to contain all the repasts that have been made memorable through the skill of the novelist. Still some mention of Ruth Pinch's beef steak pudding might surely have found a place, and who will ever forget Trotty Veck's dinner off tripe on the steps of Alderman Cute's house and the extraordinary dreams that followed.

Scribner's is capital this month. 'In the Gameland our Fathers Lost,' Mr. Frederic Ireland tells of a hunting excursion in British Columbia; Mr. John R. Spears continues his graphic description of 'The Slave Trade in America,' with an account of the life aboard a slaver in the old days when the traffic was flourishing; and Mr. W. D. Howells contributes an extremely interesting paper, giving 'A Personal Retrospect of James Russell Lowell.' Mr. Howells made Mr. Lowell's acquaintance when a young man, and he retained a strong personal friendship with him, full of literary sympathies, until his death. Another article to which we should draw attention is 'With Arctic Highlanders,' by Mr. Walter A. Wychoff, in which the author of 'The Workers' begins an account of his recent journey to the Far North with one of the Peary Relief Expeditions. In fiction, the number includes a political story, 'A Daughter of the State,' by Charles Warren; the conclusion of Mr. Ernest Seton Thompson's 'Tito'; and further chapters of the serial 'Tommy and Grizel,' by Mr. J. M. Barrie. The illustrations of the number are exceedingly good.

The Century Magazine presents a highly diversified collection of contents. Perhaps at the present moment the article that will attract most notice is 'The Influence of the Western World on China,' by Dr. D. Z. Sheffield, who, from having resided for thirty years as a missionary in the Middle Kingdom under the organisation of the American Board, can claim to be something of an authority on the subject. The writer vigorously protests against any dismemberment of the Chinese Empire. Other facts in regard to China may be gathered from Mr. R. Van Berger's paper on 'The Revolution in China and its Causes.' A second instalment of Jean Schopfer's notes on 'Amusements at the Paris Exposition' treats particularly of theatres, panoramas, and other spectacles; while the principal figure this month in Dr. William Mason's 'Memories of a Musical Life' is the Abbé Liszt. Mr. John Morley brings us to the period of the military dictatorship in his life of Cromwell, and Sir Walter Besant's illustrated paper on East London is taken up with the Thames from Wapping to Blackwall.

The Pall Mall Magazine is noticeable as ever for the artistic finish of its general production, the number and beauty of its illustrations, and the interest and variety of its literary contents. Among the many readable articles are 'The Hertford House Collection Bequeathed to the British Nation,' by the late Charles Yriarte, illustrated from special photographs; 'Inverary,' by the Rev. A. H. Malan, with a large number of views of the locality; 'Austlee to England,' by the ever statistical J. Holt Schooling; and 'London Woods,' by S. B. Carlile. Short fiction is contributed by Sidney Pickering, Arthur Ponsonby, Netta Syrett, and John Foster Fraser; while the serial story, 'The Hosts of the Lord,' by Mrs. F. A Steel, is this month brought to a conclusion. Altogether the number, if scarcely so good as some we remember, well maintains the average of this excellent magazine.

Harper's, as usual, has a very varied list of contents, and the illustrations have that special excellence which one comes to look for in this magazine. But they do not seem to be so numerous as formerly, and to find thirty successive pages without any artistic embellishment is surely a novelty in this well-conducted periodical. The principal articles are: 'Paris in 1900 and the Exposition,' by Edward Insley; 'Four Days in a Medicine Lodge,' by Walter McClintock; and 'Submarine Torpedo-boats,' by William W. Kimball. Fiction figures very largely in the number. There are no less than five short stories, in addition to further chapters of the three serials by Mrs. Humphry Ward, Israel Zangwill, and Frank R. Stockton respectively.

There are many articles in the Magazine of Art that will please the cultivated reader, but probably what he will first settle on will be Mr. M. H. Spielmann's 'Portraits of Geoffrey Chaucer,' of which a third instalment is now given us. The other interesting articles are 'James Maris,' by the late R. A. M. Stevenson; 'The Queen's Treasures of Art: Inlaid Furniture at Buckingham Palace,' by Frederick S. Robinson; and 'The Medals of Honour for Sculpture at the Great Exhibition,' by Henri Frantz. All these articles are suitably illustrated. Mention should also be made of the paper affording some information regarding recent acquisitions to 'Our National Museums and Galleries.' The frontispiece of the number is an exquisite reproduction of G. P. Jacomb-Hood's painting, 'The Passing of Autumn.'

The Argosy under the editorship of Mr. Herbert Morrah seems to have become broader-minded in its choice of subjects, and generally to have improved and launched out. In the present number there are several good things. The magazine would scarcely seem to be like itself without the name of Mr. Charles W. Wood appeared as a contributor, and accordingly we have a continuation of his interesting 'Letters from the North'; but we may point out that his present instalment is too long, and completely overbalances everything else in the number, not even excepting the serial story, 'The Warden of the Marshes,' by Sydney C. Grier. Among other articles that attract attention are 'Christ Church, Oxford,' by the Rev. Claude M. Blagden; 'The Michaelmas Rimming,' a delicate bit of country life, by George Morley; and 'The "God Save the Queen" Myths,' by J. Cuthbert Hadden. The poetry of the number is supplied, and supplied well, by Alfred Percival Graves, Lily Thicknesse, Ethel Wheeler, and the Editor. The illustrations are numerous and good—mostly from photographs.

Mr. Frank Rinder's article on 'The Wallace collection' occupies the post of honour in the Art Journal. The second instalment of 'Art in the Nursery,' by Mr. R. Davis Benn, is even more interesting than the first, and the illustrations by Mr. Cecil Aldin, R.B.A., and Mr. John Hassall are exceedingly clever. The Rev. Hugh Macmillan resumes his historical account of the town of 'Dunkeld,' and the cathedral, the waterfall at Birnam, Birnam Hill, and the banks of the Tay are admirably depicted by the artist, Mr. A. Scott Rankin 'Entretat and its Environs' is the subject of a readable paper by A. Toucey Gibert, but the little fishing town has lost much of its primitive picturesqueness in recent years. The remainder of an excellent number is made up of short notices of the Turner water-colours from Brantwood, the Paris Club of International Women Workers, Industrial Art, the Exhibition of the Society of Scottish Artists, Edinburgh, &c.

M. MARCEL PRÉVOST ON THE NOVEL OF THE TWENTIETH CENTURY.

The Paris journal Le Temps has undertaken to interview some prominent specialists on the mission devolving upon philosophers, scientists, artists, novelists, dramatists, poets, teachers, and sociologists during the early years of the twentieth century.

It begins this inquiry with M. Marcel Prévost, who, on being asked by M. Edmond Fazy to state his views as to what will be the nature of the novel of the twentieth century—or, rather, the novel of the next few years—exclaimed: 'Phew! That depends very much on circumstances, and I am not a good prophet. But after all, judging by experience and by the use of our eyes, we may see, or may think that we see, whither the novel is tending. There is a manifest tendency among our novelists no longer to devote themselves to the telling of simple love anecdotes, but to occupy themselves more and more with moral, political, and social questions. Compare some book of the day either with those of the story tellers of yesterday or with earlier works of the same author, and you will agree with me. The difference is always evident and is sometimes striking. Consequently the need is felt for longer books with wider views, and larger developments become necessary. Witness "Paul Adam" and "Gabriele d'Annunzio." ... That time has passed when the three-volume novel in the English fashion was treated off-hand as ridiculous and quite impossible to succeed in France. We have trilogies already, and shall probably soon have tetralogies; and better still, or worse, according to taste!

'Having stated this much, permit me, without circumlocution, to proclaim as foolish that mania which certain critics have for reproaching French novelists in particular with their frequent stories of adultery. In a society such as ours, founded on marriage, there can be no problem more essential, no subject more engrossing. It really seems as if our people close their eyes to everything except to the slender interest there may be in their house, to make no allusion to these things. By the bye, those virtuous English novels which are persistently held up to us as examples ("Adam Bede," "The Vicar of Wakefield," many of Meredith's works) have generally some risky passages: the seduction of a young girl, a perilous struggle between social duty and passion. . . . For the moment our romancists and sociologists have put adultery on one side; their minds are turned elsewhere: but there is nothing to prove that they will not return to such subjects one of these days, and then they will not less conscientiously accomplish properly their work as painters of manners.

'In these stories of to-day and to-morrow of which we speak—although less amusing, longer, more social, and more serious—it is woman that will still be in question quite as much as in the stories of yesterday. Her conjugal duties and desires will take a second place; but her daily struggles, her constant efforts to obtain her rights, or at least what she calls her rights, will still be described, and in all respects Woman will continue to be the indispensable heroine. . . .'

M. Prévost, while thinking that novels will become more and more social, believes there will be in the future, as in all ages, a variety of romances; and that the literature of to-morrow may produce its Dumas père, Eugène Sue, Jules Verne, and H. G. Wells. He also prophesies, and we trust he may prove a true prophet, that 'the twentieth century will have its gay authors . . . an assurance against the increasing seriousness of their brother writers!'

'As for the style of the novel of to-morrow, in my opinion,—and it is also an old opinion of M. Brunetière—it will be currente calamo (cursive). There is a growing tendency to relate clearly and rapidly the movement and changes of life. Landscapes ought only to be painted in association with the deeds and thoughts or feelings of the actors. The pure and simple description of a site will be inadmissible.' M. Prévost insists that 'Madame Bovary' is not the prototype of the romance of to-morrow. 'There is a disproportion between Flaubert's magnificent language and the little story he has to tell. . . . Anatole France has given us the style of the novel of to-morrow in his "Histoire contemporaine."'

M. Prévost thinks that the very short story à la Maupassant is dying out, but believes that in future there will be the above-mentioned long novels, and also short tales, such as those which Paul Bourget is now writing, three or four of which fill a volume.

He concludes by saying: 'We must note a curious phenomenon, the appearance of female novelists amongst us. They are as innumerable as in England. We must admire their ingenious labour, their fertility, and their faculty for observing very little things. And all this will be very well, provided they agree not to write novels about men, and not to shift from that, but confine themselves and resign themselves to writing prettily novels about women.'

REVIEWS.

From Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co.—'The Catacombs of Paris,' by E. Berthet, rendered into English by M. C. Helmore. This is a novel of the thoroughly French sensational order, abounding in mystery, intrigue, and exciting adventure. The narrative, which goes back to the times of Louis XV., very appropriately opens with the scene of a public execution in the Place de Grève, Paris, the three Montsouris robbers, as they were called, being about to expiate their crimes on the scaffold. Moreover, the eldest of the robbers, as being the worst and most hardened of the trio, is also to be broken on the wheel previous to hanging, so that it is little wonder a charming array of fine ladies and aristocracy generally, in addition to the ordinary public, assemble to witness the entertaining sight. It is under such circumstances that we are introduced to the leading characters of the story, and these embrace the wife and son of the tortured criminal, whom he has bound by a solemn oath to avenge his death; the avocat who has defended him—a young man of singularly high principles and humane disposition; the beautiful, sweet-dispositioned girl upon whom he has happily fixed his affections; and their respective parents, of the usual diplomatic worldly type, whose actions only cause the reader to wonder how they came to have such totally dissimilar children. The means taken by the boy avenger (naturally depicted by the author as of repulsive aspect, with coarse red hair and fiery eyes) to accomplish his terrible purpose is through the catacombs of Paris, those strange underground passages traversing every portion of the city; and hence the title of the book. We can promise the reader considerable excitement in following the thread of the author's romance. We may say there is a species of court jester in attendance. His name is Monsieur l'Abbé de Chavigny, and to him we are indebted for much pleasant light relief in the story.

From Messrs. Digby, Long & Co.—'One of Many,' by Vera Macha. Inexperience, we are afraid, is writ very large over this novel. The style alone is a peculiar mixture of the simple, the old-fashioned, and the high-flown, but shorn of the last two attributes—which might easily have been done by a blue pencil—it would not have been without its attractions. As for the plot, it may almost be said to be conspicuous by its absence, and what there is of it is overburdened by trivial commonplace detail that has no other effect but to irritate and weary. The author has evidently a warm sympathetic nature, quick to respond to the influences of outside humanity, but she has yet to learn that something more than this is required for the writing of a fairly good novel. Probably with an extended knowledge of life Miss Vera Macha might be able to do much better.

From Messrs. Gay & Bird (Newcastle: Mawson, Swan & Morgan).—'Native Races and the War,' by Josephine E. Butler. However much one may differ from the author of this volume in many of her opinions and the means she takes to promulgate them, it cannot be questioned for a moment that she is actuated by the most conscientious motives, and fearlessly speaks out for what she considers the right cause. So it is with this little book; for in the matter of her convictions on the Transvaal question Mrs. Butler is quite at variance with many of her Abolitionist friends both at home and on the Continent. In this case, however, the justice of her reasoning will meet, we fancy, with general acceptance, and in nothing will her opinion be more heartily re-echoed than when she says: 'There is nothing so fallacious or misleading in history as the popular tendency to trace the causes of a great war to one source alone, or to fix upon the most recent events leading up to it as the principal or even the sole cause of the outbreak of war.' But Mrs. Butler forgets that we live in feverish times, when the considerations of party and the onesidedness of the press permit us to have no undesirable recollection of political events.

From Mr. John Lane.—'Seven Gardens and a Palace,' by E. V. B., with illustrations by F. L. B. Griggs and Arthur Gordon. The author has contrived to weave into this account of seven of the most beautiful gardens in England a large amount of interesting information regarding the owners and their associations, and thus relieves what might otherwise prove, despite the manifest possession of a poetic temperament and a considerable gift of descriptive ability, a somewhat monotonous task. Under these conditions the reader will almost come to feel that he knows the localities referred to; and that wonderful attraction of country life which to the town-stained worker means so much will steal over him. The palace is Hampton Court, of which some interesting memories are given. All these essays have previously appeared either in the pages of the Anglo-Saxon Review, Blackwood's Magazine, Country Life, the National Review, or the Pall Mall Magazine, but they are well worthy of reproduction.

From Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co.—'Sailing Alone Round the World,' by Captain Joshua Slocum. There is a cheery, light-heartedness about the title of this book—a sort of 'I care for nobody, and nobody cares for me' air—that is very characteristic of its contents. The author must be a man of great resource and indifference to the ordinary weaknesses of mankind. It should be premised that Captain Slocum, in a little vessel of his own construction, 36 feet 9 inches long, over all, 14 feet 2 inches wide, and 4 feet 2 inches deep in the hold, with a tonnage of 9 tons net, and with himself as sole human equipment, sailed, after a little preliminary coasting, from Yarmouth on July 1, 1895, to Gibraltar, and from Gibraltar, touching at the Cape Verde Islands, Pernambuco, Rio de Janeiro, and Montevideo, to the Straits of Magellan, subsequently returning from Capetown (where the Spray was laid up for three weeks) home again by way of St. Helena, Ascension Island, Trinidad, and Porto Rico. All of which, and the incidents and adventures occurring during the voyage, are duly narrated in this volume. The most annoying enemy Captain Slocum had to combat with was a deadly feeling of solitude; so long as he was occupied with the duties of navigation it was not so noticeable; it was in his idle moments that he felt the intense loneliness most. So he manned his craft with an imaginary crew, and issued orders right and left to phantom sailors. He even sang lustily, or attempted to sing, having a particularly unmusical voice—made a noise of some kind. Of course at intervals he ran across other vessels of slightly larger dimensions. Sometimes their skippers were kindly and civil; sometimes the reverse. He had also many adventures. Off the coast of Morocco he was chased by a Moorish pirate, but happily a squall, which had carried away the Spray's boom, totally disabled his pursuer. The little vessel also ran a narrow shave of becoming a total wreck on the sands of Uruguay. Off Cape Froward she was chased by Indians from Fortescue Bay. But eventually, after many experiences, prosperous and otherwise, and a cruise extending over 46,000 miles, she ran into the harbour of Fairhaven, Massachusetts, where she was built, on July 3, 1898. For the actual details of this daring voyage we must refer our readers to the book itself. What we have said will at least indicate its interesting character. It is further distinguished by a striking cover, and some excellent illustrations by Thomas Fogarty and George Varian. There are also maps of the Spray's course.

From Mr. John Macqueen.—'Mis'ess Joy,' by John Le Breton. The author's previous novels have mostly dealt with some form of theatrical life, but here he shows that from simpler materials he is capable of constructing a story that shall charm and fascinate the reader by its pathos and dramatic narration. 'Joy' is the name given to a little girl, the illegitimate daughter of a farmer, whose reception into her father's household is the basis on which all the events of the story are built up. She early shows promise of good looks, which in after years is amply redeemed, but her beauty apparently only brings her misfortune in that the man for whom she so passionately cares discovers the full force of her charms after he is married to her half-sister and she herself has been united to the brutal lieutenant of a revenue cutter. It should be explained, however, that for the marriage of Richard Fabien to her half-sister Joy herself is principally responsible, the motive power being a desire to promote her relative's happiness, while her own marriage is entered into from a feeling of sheer recklessness. There are many good character sketches in the volume. Two old maids, sisters of Joy's father, are limned with delicate humorous effect, and as a companion picture we have a middle-aged bachelor for whom one of the old maids has a secret bashful affection. We have met with these characters before in the pages of fiction, but Mr. Le Breton contrives to make them still respectably interesting. An impulsive, kind-hearted French woman is also depicted with skill, and indeed of all the personages of the story it may be said that manifest thought has been devoted to their portraiture, by no means excepting the rugged, stern-hearted father. Readers will find Mr. Le Breton's novel well adapted for pleasantly solacing the tedium of an unoccupied evening.

From Messrs. Horace Marshall & Son.—'South Africa: its History, Heroes, and Wars,' by Professor W. Douglas Mackenzie, assisted by Alfred Stead. This interesting volume is divided into four parts. The first relates the history of South Africa; the second tells of its famous men and principal towns; the third is devoted solely to that remarkable personage Stephanus Johannes Paulus Kruger; and the last is concerned with the present British-Boer war pure and simple. The whole is accompanied with a plentiful supply of illustrations—for the most part very good, but here and there displaying signs of much usage. The book, as we have said, is very interesting, even to an appetite somewhat satiated with South African literature; and the fact that we cannot always agree with the opinions expressed by its authors in no way detracts from the pleasure we have taken in its perusal. On the whole, however, Professor Mackenzie is very fair in his judgments, and his summary of the causes that led to the war will enlist the sympathy of numerous readers. There were undoubtedly faults on both sides, but the Boers, we fear, were never desirous of settling matters pacifically.

From Mr. John Murray.—'Monica Grey,' by Lady Hely-Hutchinson. This is a delicately refined story, almost painful in its revelation of the agony the existence of a lawless love entails on a pure-minded woman. And in the case of Monica Grey the pain is intensified from the fact that her husband is a man of very coarse fibre, who is quite willing that his wife's good looks should be utilised for furthering his worldly political prospects. When she is wishful to make full confession of her unfortunate love for Ronald Lindsay, he stops her by saying: 'My dear child, you are making too much fuss about a very every-day affair. A political man's wife must make herself of use by gaining him the support and co-operation of influential men. If she can do it without harrowing other people's feelings, and if she is clever enough to gain her ends without making use of her personal fascinations, well and good; if not . . . well, then she and the men must take the consequences. . . . Pray don't harrow your feelings any more, my dear, nor work up your tender conscience to confess the crime of your temporary infatuation for a very charming fellow. I quite understand'——. No doubt the result [illegible] to run away with Ronald; but he is an invalid, having met with an accident, and shortly afterwards he dies. Monica lingers on for [illegible] friend, knows the true cause better. Of [illegible] and unduly sombre in the [illegible] and [illegible]

From Mr. George Redway.—'The Square of Sevens: an Authoritative System of Cartomancy,' with a preparatory notice by E. Irenæus Stevenson. Very soon after commencing the perusal of this work we find the spell of superstition gradually encircling us, and eventually, what with dealing cards here and dealing cards there, taking them first from the top, then from the bottom of the pack, cutting and shuffling them ad libitum, and noting their influence, as finally placed, upon each other, we are reduced to a complete state of mystic belief. The book, however, is really very interesting, and some time may very agreeably be spent in telling the fortunes of one's friends by the directions it conveys. These directions, it may be mentioned, are couched in language sufficiently solemn, and the whole tone of the book is calculated to restrain idle jesting. Fortune-telling by cards is plainly a very serious matter.

From Mr. Grant Richards.—'The Influence of Mars,' by Eva Anstruther. This is a volume of sketches whereof the underlying substance, as the title would indicate, is the war. They are all very good; pathetically suggestive, though not always exactly satisfying. But it is better to tell too little than too much; the reader, when the idea has been suggested to him, may be trusted to enlarge upon it for himself, and if he be of a refined and imaginative disposition perhaps the result will exceed any effect that the author could have produced. Most of the sketches are mournful in their tendencies, but occasionally one of a humorous aspect crops up. The story, for instance, of the reason that led Mr. Gerry, a middle-aged, romantic novelist with a young wife, to enlist as a trooper with the Imperial Yeomanry, is very amusing. Poor Gerry, not particularly gifted with a knowledge of human nature, had some troubles with his wife, and on the advice of his aunt he sought to exorcise them in a deeply-laid scheme, constructed after the unpractical fashion of one of his own novels. But the scheme, though brilliantly successful in the main direction, had results of which Gerry had no contemplation, and, hoist with his own petard, he was obliged to go to the war, and prove the actual hero to his wife that he had hoped to do only on paper. Each of these sketches occupies a dozen pages or so, but they are triumphs of artful condensation, and we would especially call the attention of the curious in such matters to the effective use that is made of the lapsus. But, apart from mechanical skill, they display a keen perception of human nature, and in their studies of boy life they are especially happy.

From Messrs. Sands & Co.—'Chronicles of a Country Cricket Club: being Odd Tales of the National Game,' by A. Eric Bayly and Walt Briscoe. The publication of this volume is no doubt due to the exaggerated interest displayed just now in everything attaching to our great national game. But a reader may care very much about cricket, and yet not be disposed to put up with badly constructed stories simply because this constitutes the main feature of the plot. Truth to tell, there is very little in these 'Chronicles of a Country Cricket Club' to commend; and even Mr. Bayly seems conscious of this when he makes such a profuse apology for the contents in his preface.

From Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co.—'Should She have Spoken?' by Esther Miller. Overlooking the improbability of incidents which usually distinguishes the thoroughly sensational novel, and about which it does not [illegible] us to be too critical, it may be said [illegible] Miss Miller has narrated her story with a vigorous intensity and freedom from [illegible] which [illegible] secure during perusal the faults and weaknesses of the plot. But we venture to think that the chapters which will be read with greatest interest, and that are likely to be remembered when the rest of the book is entirely forgotten, are not those connected with the main narrative—the marriage of Julian Cresswell, the re-appearance and subsequent murder of his first wife, and the steps that afterwards lead to the elucidation of the crime—but those which describe the meeting of George Demaresque, Julian's step brother, with the lady journalist, 'Vivienne Ivor,' at Sandmouth, and their growing attachment for each other. These are brightly and piquantly written, and are quite free from sensational incident. Miss Miller's book, as we have said, is not flawless; towards the end she seems to get into a bit of a tangle with the plot, and the interest is considerably allowed to evaporate by unnecessary situations. But the beings with which she has peopled her work are at least human, and not outrageous monstrosities never to be met with outside the confines of transpontine melodrama, and to this circumstance she is chiefly indebted for her success.

NEW EDITIONS.—Messrs. Ward, Lock & Co. have sent out a tastefully-bound volume of 'The Complete Prose Works of Ralph Waldo Emerson.' Naturally, in order to get so large a quantity of material into one volume, it has been necessary to use very small type, but this is clear and good of its kind, and will only present difficulties to those whose eyesight is unfortunately impaired.—A new revised and cheaper edition—the fifth—has been published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. of that excellent little work, 'Health and Condition in the Active and the Sedentary,' by Nathaniel Edward Yorke-Davies. The matter which has been cut out from previous editions in order to bring the book within its present dimensions has been that which could be most easily spared; and so well has the work of condensation been performed by the author that the utility of the volume is only very slightly, if at all, impaired.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE WEEK.

WITH AN INDEX OF SUBJECTS AND NAMES OF BOOKS IN ONE ALPHABET.

All books are in cloth unless otherwise described. When the word 'net' is printed against the price of a book it means that there is not the usual trade allowance. The words of the Index which are printed in italics refer to the name under which the title of a work appears in larger type. Publishers who observe the omission of a book from the list will confer a favour by sending a copy of the title to the office for insertion in the next number.

Mr. A. M. BURGHES,

VALUER AND ACCOUNTANT

To Publishers, Booksellers, Stationers, Printers, &c.

34 (late 1a) PATERNOSTER ROW,

is instructed to sell the following Businesses:—

STATIONERY, PRINTING, FINE ARTS, FANCY, LIBRARY, &c.—A first-class old-established Business in flourishing and important Market Town in Berkshire. Well known by the advertiser and highly recommended. Fine leasehold premises in best central position. Nominal rent. Net profit. quite £700 a year. £3,000 required, or valuation. Proprietor retiring after very successful career. A splendid opening.

STATIONERY AND PRINTING.—West End Market. Good Premises in excellent position. Rent £70. Lease 18 years to run. Rent cleared by letting part. Returns nearly £1,000 a-year. Superior printing plant. About £600 required. Very good.

PRINTING.—Busy Lincolnshire Market Town. Old-established successful Business with large and profitable connection. Superior plant. Rent £36 (very low). Long lease. Returns £7,000 a-year. Net profit over £800. About £4,500, or valuation. A rare and safe opportunity.

PRINTING.—City Business. Central premises and well-bought plant. Rent only £25. Returns, at good profits, at present quite £12 a week, but capable of immense extension. A valuation is estimated at about £500. A good chance for a practical printer.

STATIONERY, &c.—Pleasant Sussex Coast town. Shop and ten rooms. Rent £65. Can be more than cleared by letting part. Returns £800 a year. Very superior stock and fixtures. About £550 required for all. An excellent business, worthy of attention.

STATIONERY, FANCY, &c.—Good Market Town in Hampshire. Shop and four rooms in main street. Rent only £28. Profitable returns nearly £700 a year. Fine stock, and fittings modern. About £350 required. Can be successfully carried on by ordinary care and attention.

STATIONERY, NEWS, &c.—Pleasant South Coast pleasure resort. Shop, seven rooms and back entrance. Rent only £38. Returns, at fair profits, £16 a week. All cash. No risk. Offered very cheaply for £200. An early sale desired.

STATIONERY, PRINTING, &c.—Well-known prosperous town on the Great Northern main line. Rent of excellent premises only £25 Returns quite £1,400 a year. Capable of much increase. Partner would be received having £500, who would undertake book-keeping and local calling upon customers. An excellent connection.

STATIONERY, FANCY, &c.—Favourite pleasure resort in the Isle of Thanet. Attractive shop and eight rooms. Rent £60. Returns nearly £600 a year. Very profitable. Ill-health the cause of sale. Offered very cheaply. All at £200. A bargain.

STATIONERY, FANCY, &c.—High-class S.W. residentiary district. Double-fronted, well-fitted, spacious shop, electric light, and seven good lofty rooms. Rent £70. Returns £12 a week at good profits. About £250 required. A very reasonable price.

STATIONERY AND PRINTING.—Main West End thoroughfare. Rent £90. Long lease. Superior premises and very good printing plant, suitable for a practical printer. Returns £1,200 a year. Good jobbing work. Offered for £350. Proprietor retiring from the retail trade. An exceptional chance. Very cheap.

STATIONERY, FANCY GOODS, AND PERFUMERY.—Flourishing town in Hampshire. Attractive shop and four rooms. Rent £28. Lease 14 years. Returns £700 a year. Good profits. About £350 required. Old established and safe.

With 63 Illustrations.

Being a Personal Narrative of the Experiences of the Sloop 'Spray' on her Single Handed Voyage of Forty-six Thousand Miles.

8vo. 325 pp. 8*s.* 6*d.* net.

SIR EDWIN ARNOLD writes:

'I have been instructed, delighted, and filled with admiration and interest while perusing this week the account by Captain Joshua Slocum (published by Messrs. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & Co.) of his voyage round the world, single-handed, on board his little boat the "Spray." Everybody who loves the ocean, or likes to hear about it; everybody who sets high value upon gallant, fearless deeds; everybody who rejoices to see the triumphs of manhood over solitude, danger, and death itself, should and must read this wonderful story of resolute adventure. I do not hesitate to call it the most extraordinary book, in its way, ever published; and the adventure itself by far the most courageous, sustained, and successful enterprise of the kind ever undertaken by mortal man.'

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED.
